SYNOPSIS

ACT I

Rashid, a professional storyteller, explains to his son Haroun that his supply of wonderful tales comes from the Stream of the Sea of Stories. Haroun's mother, Soraya, feeling neglected by her imaginative husband, runs away with Mr. Sengupta, which causes the heartbroken Rashid to completely lose his storytelling powers.

Haroun and Rashid ride with Butt the Bus driver to the Land of K. There, Snooty Buttoo, a corrupt tyrant who rules with oppression and terror, hires Rashid to tell "praising" stories about him at a political rally. Snooty Buttoo takes Rashid and Haroun to his houseboat, where Rashid worries that his potential failure at the rally will have grim consequences. Iff, the water genie of the Sea of Stories, appears to Haroun. In an effort to save his father, Haroun agrees to travel with Iff and Butt the Hoopoe (formerly known as Butt the Busdriver) to the Moon of Katani, where Haroun drinks wishwater from the Sea of Stories. They are shocked to find the water polluted, a fact confirmed by Mali the Floating Gardener and some talking fish, and they rush to the Land of Gup for more information. In Gup City, General Kitab, Rashid (mistakenly arrested as a spy), and Prince Bolo have discovered that the Sea of Stories is being poisoned by the evil Khattam Shud of the Land of Chup. In the war between the Gups and the Chups, Khattam Shud has taken the King's daughter, Princess Batcheat, prisoner. Haroun sets off to rescue the Princess.

ACT II

In the land of Chup, Haroun and his friends are sucked onto the Dark Flagship of Khattam Shud, where machines poison the waters. Using some leftover wishwater and some magic from Iff, Haroun destroys Khattam's ship. In the Citadel of Chup, the Gups defeat the Chups. As the Citadel of Chup collapses, Haroun rescues Princess Batcheat. As a reward, The King of Gup offers to fulfill a wish for Haroun. Haroun asks to return to the Land of K with Rashid. His gift for telling stories restored, Rashid tells the crowd at the rally the tale of Haroun and the Sea of Stories. Seeing Snooty Buttoo's resemblance to Khattam Shud, the people revolt against the tyrant. Haroun and Rashid return home, where they find Soraya. She has realized her folly and left Mr. Sengupta. Rashid and Haroun welcome her back, and their little family is happily reunited.

PROGRAM NOTES

BY CLIFTON INGRAM

To read Haroun and the Sea of Stories is to start in the middle of things, albeit not in classical in medias res as many literary warhorses do. (Think: Homer's Odyssey, "The Three Apples" from Arabian Nights, or Dante's Divine Comedy, where we must rely on the story-within-the-story to learn about our characters' experiences.) Haroun does begin ab ovo ("from the egg"), from the beginning of the story, in a more or less traditional way. But storytelling can be tricky enough when told start-to-finish. Haroun's reliance on types of nested narratives allows the stories-with-the-story to echo and reinforce each other, ultimately resonating their meaning to stronger effect. For example, here's one way to parse our young hero's interconnected goals throughout the narrative:

In order for our young hero Haroun to save his family, he must first restore his father's Gift of Gab.

In order to save his father (restore his power and confidence), Haroun must save the Land of K from the corrupt politician Snooty Buttoo.

In order to save the Land of K, Haroun must first find and save the Sea of Stories (thereby restoring his father's storytelling ability to defeat Snooty Buttoo).

In order to restore the Sea of Stories, Haroun must travel to the Land of Chup and defeat the Prince of Silence, Khattam-Shud.

Simple, right? Maybe not. There is a holistic quality in how the nested narratives—the adventures within the adventure—are joined and layered. They rely on each other for the final victory of storytelling—in the end, they must defeat Khattam-Shud, as the telling of this defeat is what ultimately defeats Snooty Buttoo, not to mention the home-wrecking Mr. Sengupta—which is more a triumph of effect and feeling than any logical conclusion to the story. Here, the deus ex machina that saves the day is the act of storytelling itself, which is both a whimsical notion and somehow plausible in an abstract sense. It is not so much about following every twist and turn of the plot, but about the fun to be had with the optimistic openness of a child protagonist along the way. Even more simply put, Haroun's adventures do not need to make sense to be meaningful—even if the novel does both, in its own way.

No doubt, Haroun and the Sea of Stories is a tale about storytelling. Salman Rushdie's very choice of title emphatically hits home that this is one of "those" meta-narratives, a heady "story-about-the-nature-of-stories" story. And there is much going on in and behind the text and throughout the libretto of James Fenton's deft adaptation of Rushdie's 1990 novel. It is a veritable verbal playground for an experienced composer like Charles Wuorinen to set an opera. But for all its adult depth, Rushdie's novel reads more like a children's fairytale—why? Indeed, the literary atmosphere of Haroun and the Sea of Stories is saturated with tongue-in-cheek punning, intertextual tips-of-the-hat, and all-around whimsical wordplay. It is the kind of bookishly clever storytelling that reminds us of those childhood chimeras—like Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland or Norton Juster's The Phantom Tollbooth—the ones that we revisit out of nostalgia as adults, only to find a familiar fantastic landscape from our sepia-tinged memories rife with previously missed meanings, often of surprisingly mature content, in contemporary technicolor.

One point here is that the reading (and re-reading) of the story changes the story itself, that by the very act of reading we are always-already inadvertently projecting ourselves into the text. Another point is that seemingly benign “literary nonsense” can easily prove to be quite the opposite. The textual reversals and inversions of reality’s grey heaviness often end up carrying their own special weightless seriousness. Haroun and the Sea of Stories does so by means of faulty cause-and-effect, madcap misappropriation and misunderstanding, new-fangled neologism, and pantomime-like portmanteau. Haroun is a message in a bottle for growing minds: the type of Disney or Pixar-esque animated romp that we would call “Fun for all ages.” But beyond the simple pleasures of the text, Haroun and the Sea of Stories contains all the ingredients necessary for a good parody or satire—and can be easily read as one, as seems to be Fenton and Wuorinen’s desire in shaping their opera.

But this is all really just to say that Haroun is about the multi-faceted power that stories hold. Their imagination-fueled potency of possibility is activated not only by the telling of the tale, but also by its reception. Haroun’s own nemesis, the nefariously despotic Khattam-Shud, speaks to this power during his explanation for poisoning the Sea of Stories with all the twisted arch logic expected of a James Bond villain. According to this Arch-Enemy of All Stories, the world is not meant for entertainment and imagination, for Fun. Instead, Khattam-Shud believes, “The world is for Controlling. And inside every single story, inside every Stream in the Ocean, there lies a world, a story-world, that I cannot Rule at all.” Khattam-Shud, like a true tyrant, fears that which he cannot control. This is not surprising, of course; Rushdie’s helpful glossary at the back of his fourth novel reveals that Khattam-Shud’s name literally means “completely finished” or “over and done with,” implying a rigid and humorless fundamentalism in regard to the telling and interpretation of the very stories that he seeks to eliminate. This illuminates perhaps a more significant element about cultural storytelling: how important the stories we are allowed to tell is to culture-creation. And make no mistake, Haroun was written in the face of much oppression for Rushdie.

The value of freedom of expression to society is ultimately being examined in Haroun. This freedom determines how we as witnesses are able to access the different meanings of our own lives by proxy, literally or otherwise. After all, ultimately this freedom determines what we share and learn from each other. And so, perhaps the dominant thrust of this fanciful tale is that the more types of stories we have, the more bountiful we are able to find our lives’ meaning. Haroun and the Sea of Stories then becomes about what music critic Peter G. Davis aptly describes as “free imagination trapped in a world of oppressive thought control.” Through this lens, Haroun is a tale about the triumph of imagination over autocracy.

The steadfast composer Charles Wuorinen, who has remained loyal to 12-tone serialism for much of his long career, had the following to say about his writing the Haroun opera and staying true to the original novel:

I wanted to try to emulate the character of the book and have it both ways. I mean, in the world of serious music, there’s a very strong populist push these days, and that’s something that I want no part of, but that fact doesn’t need to get in the way of pure entertainment.

Wuorinen’s devotion to the serial technique is in some ways a political one, as serialism is all too often considered an overly academic and “unmusical” invention of early 20th century atonal pioneers. Using serialism therefore might seem contradictory to some as a means to write an opera about the triumph of freedom of expression. But for Wuorinen the tried-and-true technique seems more a means of salvation as it necessitates a constant innovation of his craft, a way for the composer to avoid the too easily consumable, of getting stuck in a rut. And Wuorinen’s contempt for “populist” neo-Romanticism is very much on record. In this light, Wuorinen’s setting a whimsical story like Haroun and the Sea of Stories with the 12-tone method feels like a thrown gauntlet, a challenge to those that would dictate another person’s artistic and creative choices—a statement that “I’m doing it my way” regardless of music scene’s political pressures. A self-described “maximalist,” Wuorinen uses serialism as a means to create vast amounts of motion, a “music luxuriant with events”—everything but the kitchen sink, as it were. Indeed, the music of Haroun and the Sea of Stories is kaleidoscopically opulent at times, never resting long on one idea, full of energy and hopefulness for the possibility around the next corner, much like its youthful protagonist. The restless music is charged with what the composer finds so attractive about Rushdie’s novel, “an admirable absence of self-pity and bitterness ... a social and political message against people who want to shut everyone up and strangle the imagination.” And in the same way that the whole is greater than a recognition of its parts in following the plot of Haroun, Wuorinen suggests that the opera’s ever-mutating maximalist effect is more important than locating the music’s internal logic: “There is a [pitch-class] set underneath, though if anyone can find it, I’ll give them a cigar. The overarching shape ultimately was given to me by the drama.” Wuorinen’s explanation sounds a bit like Iff the Water Genie’s explanation of P2C2E (Processes Too Complicated to Explain) to Haroun. Iff’s message here might be that there are things that cannot be explained, that a steadfast hope for experience to show the way might be the best option—a subliminal message to Rushdie’s son for the struggles ahead.

For all its constant shifting of textures and densities, we can easily find the holistic in the opera. The role of the tyrannical Khattam-Shud is by no coincidence also sung by the same tenor that performs Mr. Sengupta, the clerk who has stolen Soroya (Haroun’s mother) away from Rashid and family. The story’s ultimate villain, who aims to destroy the Sea of Stories, is the same as the more worldly villain that has come between Haroun’s parents and sent Rashid into a powerless depression at the start of the drama. With their many echoes and parallelisms, the nested narratives of Haroun contain their own allegorical tale for the reader to find and use.

The most important nested narrative of all is the context in which Salman Rushdie wrote his fourth novel—that is, the narrative of Rushdie’s own private life and how it is interconnected with the already-nested stories of Haroun. For those not as familiar with Rushdie’s work, the Bombay-born author was launched into literary success with his second novel, Midnight’s Children (1981), which won the Booker Prize with its uniquely sci-fi blend of magical realism with postcolonial and historical fictions. This combination creates a type of fiction that speaks truths about the reality that it is altering; and paradoxically it does so through this very artifice, as the fantastic fabrications are at the very root from which the fiction diverges from reality in the first place.

In February of 1989, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini issued a fatwā due to controversy regarding Rushdie’s third novel, The Satanic Verses, forcing the author into hiding for fear of his life (he would remain in hiding until 1998). The strain would prove enough to divide his family (like Haroun's family is divided). A few years after the publishing of Haroun in 1990, Rushdie would be divorced from his second wife, American novelist Marianne Wiggins. It seems Rushdie wished to explain this unfortunate change in the family's circumstances to his then 11-year-old son Zafar through the novel. Indeed, Haroun is based on the type of stories that Rushdie would improvise for Zafar at bath and bed times. In this way, Haroun and the Sea of Stories is a "message in a bottle" to Rushdie's son, for him to read and remember his father from afar and throughout time as he grew older. In essence, a story that could change with a growing mind. The acrostic poem of the book's dedication, which is notably used as text both to open and close the opera by Fenton and Wuorinen, is perhaps the greatest key to unlocking your own meaning in the opera Haroun and the Sea of Stories.

Zembla, Zenda, Xanadu:

All our dream-worlds may come true.

Fairy lands are fearsome too.

As I wander far from view

Read, and bring me home to you.

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

LIZ LINDER

GIL ROSE is a conductor helping to shape the future of classical music. His dynamic performances and many recordings have garnered international critical praise.

In 1996, Mr. Rose founded the Boston Modern Orchestra Project (BMOP), the foremost professional orchestra dedicated exclusively to performing and recording symphonic music of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Under his leadership, BMOP's unique programming and high performance standards have attracted critical acclaim.

As a guest conductor on both the opera and symphonic platforms, he made his Tanglewood debut in 2002 and in 2003 debuted with the Netherlands Radio Symphony at the Holland Festival. He has led the American Composers Orchestra, Warsaw Philharmonic, National Symphony Orchestra of the Ukraine, Cleveland Chamber Symphony, Orchestra della Svizzera Italiana, and the National Orchestra of Porto. In 2015, he made his Japanese debut substituting for Seiji Ozawa at the Matsumoto Festival conducting Berlioz's Béatrice et Bénédict, and in March 2016 made his debut with New York City Opera at the Appel Room at Jazz at Lincoln Center.

Over the past decade, Mr. Rose has also built a reputation as one of the country's most inventive and versatile opera conductors. He recently announced the formation of Odyssey Opera, an inventive company dedicated to presenting eclectic operatic repertoire in a variety of formats. The company debuted in September 2013 to critical acclaim with a 6-hour concert production of Wagner's Rienzi, and has continued on to great success with masterworks in concert, an annual fully-staged festival, and contemporary and family-friendly operas. Prior to founding Odyssey Opera he led Opera Boston as its Music Director starting in 2003, and in 2010 was appointed the company's first Artistic Director. Mr. Rose led Opera Boston in several American and New England premieres including Shostakovich's The Nose, Donizetti's Maria Padilla, Hindemith's Cardillac, and Peter Eötvös's Angels in America. In 2009, Mr. Rose led the world premiere of Zhou Long's Madame White Snake, which won the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 2011.

Mr. Rose and BMOP recently partnered with the American Repertory Theater, Chicago Opera Theater, and the MIT Media Lab to create the world premiere of composer Tod Machover's Death and the Powers (a runner-up for the 2012 Pulitzer Prize in Music). He conducted this seminal multimedia work at its world premiere at the Opera Garnier in Monte Carlo, Monaco, in September 2010, and also led its United States premiere in Boston and a subsequent performance at Chicago Opera Theater.

An active recording artist, Gil Rose serves as the executive producer of the BMOP/sound recording label. His extensive discography includes world premiere recordings of music by John Cage, Lukas Foss, Charles Fussell, Michael Gandolfi, Tod Machover, Steven Mackey, Evan Ziporyn, and many others on such labels as Albany, Arsis, Chandos, ECM, Naxos, New World, and BMOP/sound.

He has led the longstanding Monadnock Music Festival in historic Peterborough, NH, since his appointment as Artistic Director in 2012, conducting several premieres and making his opera stage directing debut in two revivals of operas by Dominick Argento, as well as conducting, directing and producing the world premier recording of Ned Rorem's opera Our Town.

He has curated the Fromm Concerts at Harvard three times and served as the first curator of the Ditson Festival of Music at Boston's Institute of Contemporary Art. As an educator Mr. Rose served five years as director of Orchestral Activities at Tufts University and in 2012 he joined the faculty of Northeastern University as Artist-in-Residence and Professor of Practice.

In 2007, Mr. Rose was awarded Columbia University's prestigious Ditson Award as well as an ASCAP Concert Music Award for his exemplary commitment to new American music. He is a three-time Grammy Award nominee.
