ERIC SAWYER: OUR AMERICAN COUSIN
LIBRETTO BY JOHN SHOPTAW
ERIC SAWYER  b. 1962
OUR AMERICAN COUSIN
LIBRETT O BY JOHN SHOPTAW

BOSTON MODERN ORCHESTRA PROJECT
GIL ROSE, CONDUCTOR

JANNA BATY  mezzo-soprano
ALAN SCHNEIDER  tenor
AARON ENGBRETH  baritone
DREW POLING  baritone
DONALD WILKINSON  baritone
ANGELA HINES GOOCH  soprano
TOM O’TOOLE  bass-baritone
HILLARIE O’TOOLE  soprano
JANICE EDWARDS  mezzo-soprano
DANIEL KAMALIC  baritone

THE AMHERST COLLEGE CONCERT CHOIR
Mallorie Chernin, music director

DISC 1

ACT I

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>[1]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[2]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[4]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[6]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[8]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[9]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[10]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[12]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[13]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[14]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TOTAL</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DISC 2

ACT II (cont’d)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>[1]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ACT III

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>[4]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[7]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[8]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[9]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[10]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[12]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TOTAL</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
By Eric Sawyer

MUSICAL REALITIES

In an opera containing colliding realities, I sought music that could give distinct identities to the comic play and historical drama while at the same time connecting them. The orchestral prelude, a musical background to the drama, springs from Abraham Lincoln’s Second Inaugural Address given only a few weeks before, in particular from the words “With malice toward none, with charity for all... let us strive... to bind up the nation’s wounds.” The opening musical phrase, with its rising steps followed by a descending cascade into silence, is emblematic of Lincoln’s call for forgiving and forgetting. This opening emblem constitutes the musical bridge between two realities: as peace can come only from forgiveness, the spirits of the theater audience can be lifted only through forgetting the strife of war and giving their cares over to a harmless comedy.

The musical and dramatic shape moves from the backstage darkness of the actors’ entanglements to the bright spirits of the stage once the curtain is lifted. The opening scenes of the play consist of songs and light musical repartee giving a nod to the popular operetta of the time. As the onstage plot thickens and the audience feels increasing involvement with the characters and plot, the music evolves toward a less stylized and more dramatic trajectory. The music taking place inside the play and that outside of it grow closest in the scene preceding the assassination, as a gesture of generosity and love onstage touches and informs a moment of intimacy between the Lincolns.

Folded into the lyrical, extended tonal fabric are bits either quoted from or inspired by period music, including “Dixie,” “Hail to the Chief” (prefigured by the orchestral prelude). songs from the Civil War, spirituals, music from the American frontier, and “machine music” heralding the Industrial Revolution. The libretto is replete with essential operatic moments: the drinking song, the mad scene, and letters received, stolen, and burned. The small orchestra is an approximation of the pit band that played that night at Ford’s Theater and was scheduled to cap the evening with a patriotic sing-along: “Honor To Our Soldiers.” The opera’s final chorus stands in for the songfest that never took place.

By John Shoptaw

THE TRUE STORIES BEHIND OUR AMERICAN COUSIN

When a work of art is deemed historical, it is commonly either praised for “following history closely,” or faulted for “straying” or “departing from the facts” at certain points, or condemned as a sideshow for “misrepresenting history” altogether. Such characterizations are, in my view, themselves misrepresentations of the task not only of the artist but of the historian, whose own relations to the past are neither simple nor transparent.

I will try to say something about what is involved in transforming the historical past into art by recalling some of my own methods in making the events surrounding the Lincoln assassination into the libretto for Our American Cousin, which is, among other things, a meditation on the role of art in history. I’ll start with a basic question of interest both to historians and to artificers of history: Why did Booth assassinate Lincoln? And why while Lincoln was watching a play? While acknowledging the complexity of Booth’s motives, the historian will, I think, gravitate toward those that are political, public, and explicit. That Booth shot Lincoln, leapt onstage, waved a dagger and, before exiting, declaimed the line “Sic semper tyrannis,” to upstage his family’s Shakespeareans (chiefly his father, Junius, and his brother, Edwin) has been generally discounted as idle, unsubstantiated psychologism. This position accords well with John Wilkes’s own vehement disavowal of any private motive. In the swamps of Maryland, in his diary, having received the devastating reviews of his final performance, Booth asked incredulously why he was panned for “doing what Brutus was honored for, what made Tell a Hero,” especially since his motive “was purer than either of theirs”: “I acted for my country [the South] and that alone.” Methinks the actor doth protest too much. Why did he do it, in my libretto? Booth was an actor whose chief role was his life. He constructed a drama in which he would play the role of his nation’s liberator, a part which would fix his name in history. The very different part he actually played in history’s drama he never fathomed.

Though Booth made this diary entry weeks after the event, I bring his defense into his last night’s performance, which unfolds in real time. There is a historical basis for this. Before the play, Booth handed a sealed letter to Jack Mathews (the play’s villain), instructing him to deliver it the next day to a Washington newspaper. Booth was no stranger to Mathews. Less than two months earlier, Booth had offered him an incredible part: to help abduct President Lincoln (from a theater no less) and to demand as ransom the release of all the Confederate prisoners of war. On the night of our play, Mathews had ample reasons to be suspicious, yet he pocketed the letter. Had Mathews opened the letter and read it, there would probably have been no assassination. This non-event or counter-fact, which has fallen unremarked outside the purview of history, lies near the center of my libretto.

Mathews did read the letter, but only after the assassination, and he burned it. In my libretto, he is encouraged, even directed, to burn it by Harry Hawk. Hawk, the play’s hero (the “American cousin”), was of draft age. He probably remained on the stage by hiring a “substitute” to fight in his place. It was a common practice; Lincoln himself had a substitute. Some of these substitutes doubtless were casualties of the conflict. By having Hawk’s substitute die, and by having him learn of it the night of the assassination, I was supplying him with a composite actor’s history. I did it to amplify his guilt at not acting—or at merely “acting.” Hawk was the only actor on the scene when Booth dropped onstage. When Booth turned from the audience toward Hawk, who stood between him and the exit, Hawk acted (as he told the papers) as “anyone would have done; I ran.” In a somewhat unreal scene, I bring Hawk and Mathews together over the incriminating letter. Did Mathews tell Hawk, or anybody, about it? I suspect he told somebody, but nobody knows. What I do know is that Mathews and Hawk were each guilty of inaction. So I let them play out their quintessentially theatrical scene.

It was partly in order to rob Booth of the limelight that I re-centered the libretto around the night’s performance—the play, the cast, and the audience, including the Lincolns. While I preserve much of the plot and many of the characters of Our American Cousin, I keep little of its language beyond an ad lib or two (“That reminds me of a story, as Mister Lincoln says”). Since we have the approximate text, why did I “stray” from it? Because Tom Taylor’s comedy of manners seemed to me to have become more mannered than comical. This is one opera in which the end is not in doubt. But I wanted the opera’s audience from time to time to forget what was going to happen, to lose themselves in the play’s silliness or melodrama: to act, in short, like the audience of Tom Taylor’s play. The five choral groups representing that diverse audience are given songs drawn from contemporary letters and journals. The audience included the Lincolns. Nobody knows what they said to each other during the play; drawing on their letters and on Mary Lincoln’s recollections, I put words and thoughts in their mouths and minds. (I don’t feel too bad about it; Milton put words into God’s mouth!)

But, the commonsensical reader will object, there are some things you simply can’t change. You can’t finish the play—Lincoln was assassinated mid-performance! Oh yes I can, by other means. Well, you can’t keep Lincoln from being shot! But I can briefly resurrect his spirit (Lincoln didn’t die until the following day), his old self, and give him, not Booth, the last word. My belief in art is not unlike my Laura Keene’s: it can help us forget awhile, and, if it’s doing its job, it can refresh our memories of the world.

Our American Cousin is a three-part opera depicting the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln from the perspective of the actors presenting playwright Tom Taylor’s 1851 comedy of the same name at Ford’s Theater. The work was premiered in concert version by the Boston Modern Orchestra Project (Gil Rose, conductor) on March 31, 2007 and received its world premiere stage performance on June 20, 2008 at the Academy of Music Theater (Northampton, MA) with the Boston Modern Orchestra Project (Carole Charnow, director; Gil Rose, conductor).

By Klára Móricz

On Palm Sunday April 9, 1865, General Robert E. Lee of the Confederate Army surrendered to General Ulysses S. Grant’s Union troops. The American Civil War, which had raged for four years and cost 700,000 lives, ended with Union victory. On April 11, President Lincoln gave an impromptu speech from a window in the White House in which he stated that he intended to grant suffrage to former slaves. Lincoln's promise infuriated actor John Wilkes Booth (1838–1865), who was in the crowd in front of the White House.

According to his former friend Louis Weichmann, Booth turned to him and said: “Now by God, I’ll put him through.” Booth was born in Maryland to a family of actors who shaped Shakespearean acting in nineteenth-century America. Although reasonably successful on the stage, Booth aspired higher. As the Civil War progressed, he gradually gave up acting and became a Confederate secret agent. After Lincoln's reelection in November 1864, Booth devoted his energies to a plot of kidnapping the President. As this plan failed, Booth became desperate. "For six months we had worked to capture," he wrote in his diary, "but our cause being almost lost, something decisive and great must be done." To his friends he announced that he was done with the stage. For his last performance, he said, he planned to play in Venice Preserv’d, an English Restoration play by Thomas Otway about a conspiracy against the senate in Venice. Only those who knew the play’s plot understood that Booth aspired to the role of assassin.

In fact, Booth remained an actor until the very end. He scripted his plot for the assassination of President Lincoln to the last line, casting himself in the main role. This final role, he knew, would make him more famous than his father or brothers. “Do you plan on seeing the show tonight?” he asked the owner of Star Saloon, whisky in hand, as he waited for the curtain to rise on the performance of Our American Cousin in Ford’s Theater, in Washington, DC. “You ought to. You’ll see some damn fine acting!”

Since Booth’s family was friends with John T. Ford, the theater’s owner, Booth had free access to all parts of the theater; he himself had played there on several occasions, once even before President Lincoln. On Good Friday, April 14, Laura Keene’s traveling company was performing in the theater. Keene had been forced to give up her own theater on Broadway due to the war. She toured with her company to maintain her income, and, before arriving in Washington, DC, she invited President Lincoln to see Our American Cousin, a farcical comedy by Tom Taylor about the meeting of an awkward, rough-hewn American with his aristocratic English relatives. Keene knew Lincoln personally and was sure that the president, who loved low comedy as much as he loved Shakespeare’s tragedies, would accept her invitation.

Booth was familiar with the play and could recognize the lines while waiting outside the presidential box. He knew that in Act III, scene 2 only one actor, Harry Hawk, would be onstage. He chose that moment to enter the box and fire a leaden ball into Lincoln’s skull. He then planned to use his acrobatic skills to jump fifteen feet on the stage and deliver his line, “Sic semper tyrannis!” (“Always to tyrants!”), the motto of the State of Virginia.

Lincoln’s assassination is one of the best-documented events in American history. Booth, fatally shot in Bowling Green, Virginia, by Union soldiers twelve days after his escape from Ford’s Theater, became the protagonist of historical studies (i.e. James Swanson’s Manhunt: The 12-Day Chase for Lincoln’s Killer, 2007; Alan Axelrod’s Lincoln’s Last Night: Abraham Lincoln, John Wilkes Booth, and the Last Thirty–Six Hours Before the Assassination, 2005; and Thomas Goodrich’s The Darkest Dawn: Lincoln, Booth, and the Great American Tragedy, 2006, to name only the most recent), of popular theater (i.e. the musical Assassins by Stephen Sondheim and John Weidman), and television movies (i.e. The Day Lincoln Was Shot). Eric Sawyer and John Shoptaw’s opera, Our American Cousin (2007) is the first operatic treatment of the subject. Because of the inherent complexity of the genre, history and fiction, action and reflection are subtly layered to create a deeply felt musical and poetic commentary on one of the greatest traumas of American history. The music itself has poetic power, exemplified by Sawyer’s decision to start the opera with a chord progression that outlines both the beginning of the tune “Hail to the Chief,” the official anthem of the President of the United States, and the first melodic phrase of the “Dona nobis pacem” (“Grant us peace”) movement of J. S. Bach’s B Minor Mass [DISC 1 TRACK 1]. Already this initial gesture signifies the composer and librettist’s intention to downplay Booth’s role in the national tragedy. Violent, obsessive, over-ambitious, and, most crucially, unreflective, Booth remains a two-dimensional character in the opera, fixated on his intended “glorious act.” By turning the stage into reality and the play into history, he aimed to become, as he says in the opera, “the last Shakespearean.” But can one enter history by playing in real life the roles that Shakespeare created for the stage? Over-acted and badly executed, Booth’s final act is consciously de-centered in Our American Cousin. His heroic jump is turned into a miserable leap because his leg is caught in the Union flag, his intended, pretentious line becomes a curse (“Damned flag spoiled my leap!”), and his central act is interpreted by the audience as a “gag,” unexpected, yet still seen as part of the comedy [2|8].

Comedy and tragedy, art and reality, action and reflection thus mix almost seamlessly in the opera. The comedy played on stage spoils Booth’s intended heroic performance, just as the brutal interruption of the comic play violates the sanctuary Laura Keene offered to the audience as protection from the wounds of war. The highpoint of fun, the audience’s long-time favorite, would have been Lord Dundreary’s sneeze, an extravagant mannerism originally introduced into Our American Cousin by English actor E. A. Sothern. In the opera, this is precisely the moment when a woman’s voice from the President’s box announces that Lincoln has been shot [2|8]. Bewildered, Ned Emerson, the actor who plays Lord Dundreary, stops mid-sneeze and leaves the stage, while his interrupted sneeze reverberates in the audience’s outcries “shot,” “ahhh, shoot.”

A different transition between comic stage action and serious off-stage reflection marks Lincoln’s earlier aria, the high point of the second act [1|22]. After Asa, the American cousin, finishes his tall tale about “possum herding,” Lincoln joins in the audience’s laugher, praising Harry Hawk, who played Asa for his “common” look. Accused by his enemies of being common, vulgar, and boorish himself, Lincoln could have easily identified with “the backwoods bumpkin, honest Asa,” who, as Laura Keene describes him in her introduction to the play, “travels east to reunite two severed branches of a family.” To make the similarity between Asa and Lincoln stronger, Asa’s birthplace is changed in the opera from Vermont to Illinois. But the relief provided by Asa’s antics (“Don’t know when I laughed so hard,” Lincoln says) is short lived. The word “constitution” serves as a pivot to switch Lincoln’s attention from his “hard-to-look-at” physical appearance to the shame of the United States, the institution of slavery, which is so “hard to look at, difficult to see.” If you don’t face it, if you don’t destroy it, Lincoln reflects, it spreads and, like an overgrown vine, “cracks your house in two.”

The images of the house cracked in two (a reference to Lincoln’s speech at the Republican Convention on June 16, 1858: “A house divided against itself cannot stand”), of the removed vine (in Lincoln’s aria), of the moon cut into two, of the missing limbs (in Hawk’s aria), Emerson’s cane broken by Booth in the opera’s first scene, the death of Hawk’s substitute in the war that irreversibly severs him from his shadowy double, the presence of the amputee war veterans and widows in the audience, the interrupted sneeze and the violently truncated comedy, are all related to the central topic of the opera: the sense of truncation and division that permeates the painful reality of the United States at the time of the Civil War. Even the partitioned space in which the actors move—onstage and offstage, fantasy and reality, comedy and tragedy—reflects this theme.

At climactic moments these divided worlds collide. In scene 5 of Act I, the backstage rehearsal culminates in Hawk’s, Emerson’s, and Mathews’s rough drinking song (a scene we never see in the play itself, since it comes after the assassination) [11|3]. As the rehearsal develops into a scuffle, Booth, always eager to incite violence, joins in from a distance, singing the refrain of Dan Emmett’s minstrel tune “Dixie,” which became the unofficial anthem of the Confederate States during the Civil War. In the opera the end of the line, “look away, Dixie Land” is changed to “look away, if you can,” signaling the contrast between Lincoln’s painful and difficult looking at the shame of slavery and the South’s deliberate “looking away” from the cruelty of America’s “peculiar institutions.” Booth’s line serves as a connecting link between the stage fight and the reality of war represented by the audience whose lines, heard earlier in the opera, seep in the ensemble, giving voice to widows mourning their loved ones, to businessmen cheering over their war profit, to nurses who tended the wounded, to amputee veterans who lost their limbs, and to freedmen who fought in the war.

Booth’s dark shadow is cast over the play on stage in another scene, too. As Lincoln has his comic double in the generous, boorish Asa of the play, so does Booth in the evil solicitor Coyle. Coyle’s lines about the document that assures his future ownership of the Dundrearys’ property is echoed offstage by Booth’s threatening reference to his letter to the editor of The National Intelligencer, which he had written to assure his future historical significance [2|2].

In contrast to Booth’s two-dimensional figure, the other actors are represented in the opera as complex human beings haunted by guilt. Harry Hawk, who receives a letter in the first act about his substitute’s death in the war, tells his surrealistic dream of finding the corpse on a moon-lit blue field [1|5]. The images of the aria again recall a truncated reality of missing limbs and missing lives. Hawk’s final aria registers his second missed chance of taking real action by stopping the escaping Booth [2|10]. “Now I am condemned to play myself,” the guilt-ridden Hawk sings. A similar guilt assails Jack Mathews (who plays Coyle) to whom Booth entrusted the letter intended to appear in The National Intelligencer after the assassination. He realizes too late that his irresponsible act of pocketing the letter without checking it cost the President’s life. Although he despises Booth for pretending to be “a man of consequence,” he also knows that he, Booth’s “breathless messenger,” will take his shared responsibility for the crime to his grave [2|11]. United by their inability to take real action, Mathews and Hawk burn the letter, escaping from the police as well as from their own guilt into their transient actor personalities: “we’re guilty—we know it—of something, of everything we did not do.”

By burning the letter, Hawk and Mathews attempt to erase private and public memory. The scene is marked in the music by the last, grotesquely distorted appearance of a motive, one that appears during moments of forgetting and remembering. This falling chromatic figure first occurs in the orchestral prelude; it returns during Hawk’s aria when Hawk, after receiving the letter about the death of his substitute in the war, tries to block out reality with alcohol; it reappears when Asa chooses to forget his ownership of Dundreary Manor; and it surfaces, most crucially, when Laura Keene, manager of evocation and forgetting, invites the audience “to forget awhile.” Although she shares this motive of forgetting and remembering with others, she seems to be the only one who has the power to consciously thicken or dissipate the fog of oblivion. The distortion of the motive in the last act suggests that Hawk and Mathew’s retreat from reality into the theater, “where everything, where nothing ever happens,” is futile, a grotesque distortion of Laura Keene’s attempt to maintain the theater as a temporary refuge from reality.

Laura Keene’s refuge, however, cannot transform reality. The contrast between the world of theater and the world of reality creates guilt—a guilt that, like division, permeates the opera. It is only Booth, simplistic poseur that he is, who is untouched by guilt. Lincoln’s melancholy figure is constantly shadowed by a sense of guilt—guilt for the shameful condition of slavery, for the truncated country, for the bloodshed caused by the “pestilent war.” Although guilt frequently colors the lines of the actors, the character who takes on most of the guilt in the opera is Laura Keene. She is the one who invited Lincoln to watch the play, who encouraged her audience to “leave the world behind” and set sorrows free, who promised “the North and South will pass away, forgiven and forgotten” [1|15]. But her guilt is more global than that. Accused after the assassination by Mary Lincoln of having the immoral profession of acting, she poses questions about the role of art in general, about artists’ right to practice their art during war, and about their self-deceptive belief that “art brings peace.” At the end she is forced to acknowledge art’s powerlessness: “I couldn’t keep the bloodshed out; I couldn’t keep the war from breaking in.”

In contrast to Booth who remains trapped in his actor’s pose, Laura Keene manages to assume roles that carry significance beyond the events surrounding Lincoln’s death. After the assassination her guilt transforms her momentarily into Lady Macbeth, who, turned insane after her participation in regicide, tries to wash the blood off her clothes. “I’ll never get it out of my sight.” Keene sings frantically. But she is not only the theater manager, the famous actor, the fictitious Mary Dundreary in the play, and Lady Macbeth in her imagination, she is also Mary Magdalene, who, in this Passion scene of Good Friday, holds and washes the head of the sacrificial victim. Her words, “Jesus, pour down your pity,” uttered while she is cradling Lincoln’s head in her lap, plea for mercy for all [2|9]. And mercy of a sort is granted, because Keene, like Mary Magdalene in the garden of Gethsemane, gains access to a transfigured reality. In a scene recalling that in which the resurrected Christ addresses Mary Magdalene in the garden, Lincoln’s spirit briefly reappears, though without divine understanding.

During the light and almost comical last words of Lincoln’s spirit (“I can’t carry a tune two feet before I spill it.”) the orchestra is reduced first to a few rattling, broken chords on a banjo, then falls totally silent during Lincoln’s quotation from his favorite play, Macbeth (“Duncan is in his grave. After life’s fitful fever he sleeps well.”)[2|13]. The silencing of the orchestra at this moment is significant. Besides underlining Lincoln’s unmusical personality, it also negates the long-lived illusion that art (especially music) has redeeming power. Music can provide local color (as by quoting “Dixie,” “Hail to the Chief,” and the Civil War song “When This Cruel War is Over” or by faintly echoing Negro spirituals, patriotic marches, seafaring songs or operetta); it can express feelings, differentiate characters and scenes, enhance the drama, relieve and refresh memory, but its redemptive, healing power is limited. The musical silence that surrounds Lincoln in this last moment in the opera signals the assassinated President’s release from memory and guilt, and grants him a fleeting rebirth as an imperfect, but guilt-free human being, disrobed of the heavy presidential garb of responsibility. Obviously, this liberated Lincoln has no answer to Keene’s last question: “Oh Mister President, don’t you really know what happened?” It is not Lincoln who must make sense of the events, but the survivors.

Paradoxically, Sawyer’s gesture of deflating art by silencing it during Lincoln’s last words enhances the redeeming potential of the last scene. In the final chorus the audience of Ford’s Theater is heard, chanting the long list of names of places where battles were fought, bodies were mangled, and the country was dismembered [2|14]. This final incantation sounds like a desperate effort to make sense of events, to re-member what was dismembered, to heal what cannot be healed, and to complete the truncated line (“pluribus, pluribus, pluribus”—from many parts) of the motto of the united country (“E pluribus unum”—from many, one). The repetition of the word pluribus also echoes the French pleurs (tears), giving this final chorus the mourning solemnity of Bach’s Passions.

Ultimately, the opera is not so much about the violent act of Lincoln’s assassination by John Wilkes Booth as it is about the condition of truncation, division and dismembering, and the possibility of healing, which, as the characters reflect, can come only through the purgatory of memory and the acceptance of guilt. “Funny, how hard it is to remember, to piece it all together, to pick up the threads and thrums of what happened,” the audience sings in the final chorus. What glimmers through the mist of history, the mist of forgetting, mis- and re-membering in this opera is something we are still trying to piece together.
ACT I

As the cast of the comic play Our American Cousin assembles backstage, aging actor Ned Emerson spins out a comparison of theater to war, while leading man Harry Hawk broods over a letter informing him of the death of a friend he hired to be his substitute in battle. Character villain Jack Mathews banter with John Wilkes Booth, who appears backstage to present him with a sealed letter announcing news “that has not come to pass.” Knowing Booth has concocted violent and subversive schemes in the past, an alarmed Mathews hides the letter in his pocket. As they arrive, groups of theatergoers voice their thoughts, while backstage a last-minute rehearsal erupts into a scuffle just as the company manager/leading lady, Laura Keene, enters to deliver a stern admonishment to the actors. At the sound of “Hail to the Chief” Keene walks onstage to welcome Abraham and Mary Lincoln, exhorting the audience to put war behind them and forget their cares for the evening of entertainment.

ACT II

As the theater curtain rises on an English country estate, Mary Dundreary (Laura Keene) is helping her forgetful father, Lord Dundreary (Ned Emerson), to locate a misplaced letter, which turns out to be from a backwoods American cousin, Asa Dundreary (Harry Hawk), announcing his imminent visit to Dundreary Manor to settle some “ancient business.” Overhearing news of the visit of a presumably wealthy American, Lady Mountchessington schemes with her daughter Gussy to secure Asa’s hand in marriage. Arriving as if on cue, Asa confounds the pair with a coarse tall tale of “herding possum” on the frontier. Abraham Lincoln laughs heartily at the frontiersman’s mannerisms, so comically resonant with his own public persona. The villainous Solicitor Coyle (Jack Mathews) informs Lord Dundreary that he now holds the deed to the family estate, and that only his daughter’s hand in marriage will forestall ruin. As the family assembles for dinner, Asa is smitten with Mary Dundreary and instantly detects Coyle’s plans. The rivals jockey for seats at a lavish dinner table as underfed soldiers from the theater audience look on with indignation.

ACT III

As Mary Dundreary leads an adoring Asa on a tour of her modern dairy, Asa spins a yarn of a deathbed bequest by his stepfather of sufficient money to save the Dundreary estate. Mary rushes off to tell her father of their salvation. Conversing quietly in their box, Abraham and Mary Lincoln look to their future after the presidency, while Booth, outside, rehearses for the assassination. Asa encounters the still eager Mountchessingtons, and having sacrificed his fortune to save the estate, declares himself penniless. As they escape from Asa’s comic scorns, a shot is heard. Booth leaps from the presidential box and wields a knife at the paralyzed Hawk before fleeing. While the actors attempt to continue the play, Laura Keene tries to calm the crowd, which instead erupts calling for mercy and justice. Within the presidential box, Mary Lincoln prepares for a life of mourning while a surgeon tenders hopelessly to Lincoln. Laura Keene, seeing the president lying on the bare floor, takes his head on her lap and bathes it. Mathews remembers Booth’s letter in his pocket, and he and Hawk set fire to it just as police arrive to arrest them for questioning. While Laura Keene is left to wander the stage alone wondering the value of her life in theater, a shadowy figure approaches to ask her when the play will resume. Recognizing Lincoln in the figure Keene exclaims, “Don’t you really know what happened?” Upon Lincoln’s silence, the audience chorus gives a cryptic reply in the form of a recitation of the names of Civil War battlegrounds.
LAURA KEENE & HER COMPANY

Laura Keene
Director & Manager of the Company playing Mary Dundreary (daughter of Lord Dundreary)

Harry Hawk playing Asa Dundreary
(the Dundreary’s long lost “American Cousin”)

Jack Mathews
longtime acquaintance of John Wilkes Booth playing the villainous John Coyle, Lord Dundreary’s lawyer

Ned Emerson
aging thespian, playing Lord Dundreary (Mary’s father)

Lady Mountchessington
an avaricious dowager, mother of Gussy

Gussy Mountchessington her romantic daughter

IN THE AUDIENCE

President Abraham Lincoln
Donald Wilkinson, baritone

Mary Lincoln
Angela Hines Gooch, soprano

John Wilkes Booth
Tom O’Toole, bass-baritone

Doctor Leale, attending President Lincoln
Daniel Kamalic, baritone

Audience chorus
The Amherst College Concert Choir
(women, veterans, freedmen and freedwomen, nurses, businessmen)

SPEAKING PARTS

Binny, the Dundreary’s butler
Marshall Nannes

Two soldiers
Mark Knapp, Ross Wolfarth
[1] Prelude

[2] Scene 1: A Sneeze
Backstage at Ford’s Theater

EMERSON (studying his lines, rehearsing a sneeze)

Ah ahh ahhhhh...
(brightly)

Aha!
And they call me Addlepate!
Who counts the lines missing in action when a legend reclaim the stage?
My gathering sneeze will take the audience by storm and save my name.

[3] Arts of Theater
— Aria —

EMERSON (pompously)

Are not the arts of theater like the arts of war?
Each company musters its troops and parades them in sabers and plumes to the music of fifes and clarions.
Their lines are drawn up and fired, and others as hotly returned!
(reflects, warming to his theme) suppose a dramatic persona shoots, or stabs another persona dead, do soldiers rush the stage and apprehend the villain?

Why not! It’s just a play.
Well, so it is in war.
A brother runs his brother through, and yet commits no murder.
The part he plays is part of one tremendous drama directed from the wings.
And that’s just the mystery:
Do soldiers rush the stage and apprehend the villain?
Why no! It’s just a play.
Well, so it is in war.
A brother runs his brother through, and yet commits no murder.
The part he plays is part of one tremendous drama directed from the wings.

[4] Scene 2: Harry Hawk’s Substitute
Backstage

HAWK (drinking but not drunk, reading from a letter)

We regret to inform you...
(regretful)

EMERSON (taken aback, offended, not yet recognizing Hawk)

Regret, that I am dead,
(regretful)

I dress you in boiled blue linen, fasten your cross-belt and tourniquet.
I dust off your forage cap, your overcoat, and your knapsack full of traps.
But when I kneel to pull your knee boots on, I find you’ve sent out roots. Your uniform is hanging from a blasted possum oak. The trunk is gouged and powder burned and slick with sap. Some limbs are yanked away. Their sockets are bubbling. But I can feel along where the limbs were. The air is still warm and slender to the touch. Higher up a bobolink sits burbling, pouring out its little jug of song. My throat is sore. I take a drink. Now nothing else will ever quench my thirst.

(Matthews inspects his bottle, which is still empty.)

HAWK (coming up without being noticed, noticing Hawk’s condition)

Hello, Harry. You’re in good spirits. What’s that you’re spiriting away?

HAWK (straightening his costume)

Some business of mine.

MATTHEWS

Another part?

HAWK

I’m not playing, Jack. This is real.

MATTHEWS

Real? Well, it can’t be as real as all that.

HAWK

My substitute is dead. It says here he died for me short of Petersburg.

MATTHEWS

We’re men of acting, Harry. We make the stage our world. We act for others; let them act for us.

(Booth enters across the stage.)

MATTHEWS (spots Booth)

But look, isn’t that Wilkes Booth, disguised as a tragedian?

(Hawk waves dismissively, and exits.)

[6] Scene 3: Mathews and Booth backstage

(Matthews sees Mathews and approaches, smiling.)

MATTHEWS (extending his hand)

Wilkes! Still roaring? How’s your throat?

BOOTH

My voice is fine tonight. Besides, my lines are few.

(Booth (shaking hands)

My voice is fine tonight. Besides, my lines are few. (retrieves a letter from his pocket) I have a letter for you.

Good Friday news that has not come to pass. Will you deliver it? I won’t trust it to the Federal mail.

MATTHEWS (takes the letter and reads from the envelope)

COYLE?

Are you joking? (Matthews holds the letter out for Booth to take back, which he doesn’t.)

BOOTH (changing the subject)

I understand your bumpkin emperor will attend the play tonight without his tipsy centurion. I saw the Grants this afternoon evacuating Washington, in terror. I suspect, of Mary Lincoln’s scenes.

MATTHEWS (smiling)

Yes, she is theatrical, but she lacks your legendary gymnastics.

BOOTH

Only a swoon is required.

MATTHEWS

Booth, what happens here? Were his last reviews that bad? What happens here, where everything, where nothing ever happens? (he pockets the letter and exits.)

[7] What Happens Here?

— Aria —

What happens here? Here where I live out my lives, a villain clad in irony, a snake that never leaves its lair or sheds its coat of mirrors. Each night I spend a life, forging my schemes among sultans and hasbeens, starlets and octoiron. Hundreds of women have eluded my clutches. I have cursed my last curse hundreds of times. I have hissed and been hissed in house after house. I have stolen and squandered fortune after fortune. (looks at the letter) Now enters Booth, who hands me a letter. Am I directed to conspire against our Caesar? Will I be held responsible? Is he mad enough to act? Were his last reviews that bad? What happens here, where everything, where nothing ever happens? (He pockets the letter and exits.)

Scene 4

In the theater audience; some seated, some arriving engage in conversation.

A MAN (responding to a question) No, just the President.
A SECOND MAN
Well, God bless U.S. Grant anyhow!
A WOMAN
The President? We see him everyday.
But Laura Keene!
A SECOND WOMAN (pointing)
That’s Eleanor!
Three years of table rapping, and she’s let her Chester go.
A THIRD WOMAN (to her woman friend) (pointing) that’s Eleanor!
three years of table rapping, and she’s let her Chester go.
A second Woman
(to her woman friend) (ihagine) the children won’t go near him, the way he eats. i won’t neither.
(turning to an amputee, whose crutches have fallen) excuse me, are these your crutches?
The veteran amputee Wal, i’m agonter see linkern and i’m agonter sleep, lessen they’s music.
A second veteran (indignantly) they lettin’ collurds in now?
A Freedman
Father abraham’s gonna be right up there.
We’ll see him, and he’ll see us.
A Businessman
(putting his overcoat on seats) pardon me, are these seats reserved?
A Woman
(handling him his overcoat)
First come, mister, first serve!
A Nurse
(wiping herself)
Filthy pestilential streets!

[8] Chorus of Women
We met at the depot at dawn, when they rang out name after name of the wounded, the missing, and dead—
Chestnutt and Evans and Green,
Sometimes at H, sometimes at M or Y a gasp or a groan would strike somebody in homespun or bombazine.
She’d sink out of sight, leaving a hole behind.
We’d drop down around where she lay,
but we never could reach her in time:
hers mouth would be working that terrible name—
sometimes at H, sometimes at M or Y.

[9] Chorus of Amputees
We laid down our arms, our kneecaps and rifle butts;
we emptied our barrel chests when that weren’t enough.
The newspapers speak of a final disarmament.
How come, when we already laid down our arms?
We wagered our lives to crush the rebellion, but we never intended to set no one free.
they tol’ us to seize any runaway contraban’, but how can you emancipate three-fifths of a man?

[10] Chorus of Freedmen
We laid down they hoes and children, we done let their people go;
we abandoned mississippi, we invaded ohio.
You was fightin’ with your black hand bound and tied behind your back, you was fightin’ without knowin’ what idea to attack.
We picked up your enfield rifle, we strapped on your haversack,
Ever since we walked on over, three-fifths from one nothin’ lacks.

Rend your garments, ladies, but rend not your hearts.
When the wounded are hauled in, shattered and glazed, strip them and wipe them and burn their clothes that the surgeons can rend their tattered members.
Bind up their remnants with blood-vessel silk, then bandage their wounds but guard against feeling and prophylac daily your heart if you care to survive.
Rend all that you see from your minds,
dear ladies, rend everything saving your hearts.

[12] Chorus of Businessmen
The war was kind to us; we made a killing.
you’ll light your oil lamps with kerosene.
Start eating from a can; you’ll find it filling.
We fortify our work with backs of green.
You’ll drink from Mrs. Borden’s powdered cow.
Please take our catalogue—it’s so appealing.
But let’s get back to work, the time is now.
There’s money to be made. We know, we made a killing.

[13] Scene 5: Drinking Song
Backstage rehearsal
(Enter Emerson, Hawk, Mathews, and Booth, who observes from a distance.)
HAWK
Hey men! Let’s run through the wine-cellar scene. Last night it went so badly even the audience noticed. Ned, know where we are? EMERSON (thinking, then brightly) Ford’s Theater! MATHEWS (laughs) Tonight will be unforgettable! HAuk (impatiently to Emerson) The scene, Lord Dundreary, the scene! EMERSON (frantically searching his script) My mistake, fellow thesspians. (finding his place, composing himself) Ahem! The wine-cellar scene, Lord Dundreary’s ancestral cellar, Dundreary manor, somewheres deep in Southron Englan’. (All quickly take their roles and places.) HAuk (in role as Asa, addressing Emerson/Dundreary) Wal, Lord Dundreary, this fix we’re in needs fixin’! I reckon by now Mary’s got that legalistic rascal Coyle absolutely histered. We’ll get him singin’, then we’ll poach his keys. MATHEWS (as Coyle) And this will be my wine-cellar! A drink, boys, to my nameless forebears, may they wrestle in peace with yours. ASA (glass in hand) Some sherry cobbler? COYLE I’ll try a shot of your flintlock whiskey. Guaranteed to kill at forty paces! ASA (serving him whiskey) I warrant it’ll hit the spot. Let’s have a song! COYLE We’ll drink to This, we’ll drink to That, and after we purge her keys, we’ll find out who gets licked here.

ASA and LORD DUNDEARY
We'll drink to This, we’ll drink to That, and after we purge her keys, we’ll find out who gets licked here.

BOOTH
Look away, look away, if you can.

ASA and lord dundreary
We’re coming tonight to watch you play, and we are here as actors to help them let their troubles go—and that means each of you who means to stay.

ASA and lord dundreary
Well we’ll drink to this, we’ll drink to that, we’ll drink to and the other; and after we purloin her keys, we’ll find out who gits licked here. BootH
Will old times ever be forgot? … mixed audience chorus (drowning each other out)

Scene 6
Onstage LAURA KEENE (comes onstage applauding and turns to the Lincolns, who take their bows and their seats) We’re awfully pleased to welcome you, Mrs. Lincoln, and you, Mr. President, here at Ford’s Theater, to our peacetime comedy, “Our American Cousin,” (exuberantly performed by our traveling company upwards of one thousand nights.)

Laura Keene If you will work for Laura Keene again, I will have peace. What in tarnation has gotten into you? Don’t you realize the war is over? Our President and our First Lady are coming tonight to watch us play, and we are here as actors to help them let their troubles go—and that means each of you who means to stay.

Laura Keene
(ominously she surveys her cast. From the orchestra pit come strains of “Hail to the Chief.”) Listen, the President’s anthem. Make yourselves ready, men, to entertain.

Laura Keene
Tonight will be my final performance upon this capitol stage. I hope you enjoy it.

Laura Keene
Tonight we grant you general leeway. Please put yourselves at ease.

Laura Keene
I think you’ll recognize our story a certain backwoods bumpkin, honest Asa, travels east to reunite two severed branches of a family. Why, he even marries Mary, as played by me. Hurrah Miss Keene! (While Keene and the audience blow kisses to each other, Mary and Abraham Lincoln exchange words.)

Laura Keene
Even marries Mary! The impudence of that coquette!

Laura Keene
Mary, Mary, keep your peace, for Willie’s sake, Mother. Remember, tonight we mean to leave the world behind.

Laura Keene (resuming) Tonight will be my final performance upon this Capitol stage. I hope you enjoy it. Tonight we grant you general leeway. Please put yourselves at ease.

Laura Keene
I think you’ll recognize our story a certain backwoods bumpkin, honest Asa, travels east to reunite two severed branches of a family. Why, he even marries Mary, as played by me. Hurrah Miss Keene! (While Keene and the audience blow kisses to each other, Mary and Abraham Lincoln exchange words.)

MARY LINCOLN (furiously)
Even marries Mary! The impudence of that coquette!

Laura Keene
Mary, Mary, keep your peace, for Willie’s sake, Mother. Remember, tonight we mean to leave the world behind.

Laura Keene (resuming) Tonight will be my final performance upon this Capitol stage. I hope you enjoy it. Tonight we grant you general leeway. Please put yourselves at ease.

Laura Keene
I think you’ll recognize our story a certain backwoods bumpkin, honest Asa, travels east to reunite two severed branches of a family. Why, he even marries Mary, as played by me. Hurrah Miss Keene! (While Keene and the audience blow kisses to each other, Mary and Abraham Lincoln exchange words.)
The North and South will pass away, forgotten and forgiven, and rise again from a single bed with all their living and their dead united. (mysteriously)

How long since we've fallen asleep together? Maybe we'll never remember. There must have been years of tossing and turning against each other. We were trying to wake each other from the same nightmare. We were trying to bury ourselves under the same cover, till one day it dawned on us who had fought the night away: We could be happy tending a nation, we could be busy watching a play. and now, Mary and Abraham Lincoln, and you, dear members of our audience, we invite you to forget awhile, everything that's come and gone, till your memories come back to you refreshed. (The audience applauds Miss Keene, who bows and exits; and they applaud the Lincolns, who acknowledge them, and then settle themselves down for the play.)

ACT II

[16] Scene 1: Father and Daughter
Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(Mary enters, carrying her dairy account book.)

MARY (ordering)
Fourteen Jersey yearlings, fourteen cowbells, one evaporator drum...

LORD DUNDREARY
Oh, there you are my dear. I have something for you. Something important, perhaps?

MARY
How marvelous, Father! What is it?

LORD DUNDREARY
What is it my pet?

MARY (a bit exasperated)
What is it you have for me!

LORD DUNDREARY
I really couldn't say! Perhaps you might give me a clue.

MARY
Very well, Father. Isn't it something new?

LORD DUNDREARY
I really couldn't say! Perhaps you might give me a clue.

MARY
Very well, Father. Isn't it something new?

LORD DUNDREARY
Why yes, I believe it is!

MARY
And small?

LORD DUNDREARY (pondering the clues)
Something small, something small and new.

MARY
Well then, what is it?

LORD DUNDREARY (stalling for time)
What is it? Exactly! What is it? I think I may hazard a guess. Is it a...? (his hesitation becomes the start of a violent sneeze) ah, ahh, ahhhh...?

MARY
Bless you, Father!

LORD DUNDREARY
Botheration, Mary! You spoiled my beautiful sneeze. I caught the awful thing last night in that confounded draft. My doctor gave me something for it: a little medicinal draught.

MARY
A draught for the cold that you caught in the draft. Why Father, you've almost enough for a game of draughts. But we're not making any headway.

LORD DUNDREARY
That's because my head is in the way. But let me see. Let's try a riddle! What gives a cold in the head, and cures a cold, and pays the doctor's bill, and makes a...?

MARY (prompting him)
And makes a ho...?

LORD DUNDREARY
And makes a who?

MARY
And makes a ho...

LORD DUNDREARY
And makes a garden hoe.

MARY
And makes a home gar...

LORD DUNDREARY (getting frustrated) And makes a home gar...

MARY
And makes a home gar...

LORD DUNDREARY (brightening) And takes home a garfish?

MARY (a bit less patient) A home guard, Father! And makes a home guard look for... substitutes! What gives a cold and cures a cold, and pays the doctor's bill, and makes a home guard look for substitutes? It couldn't be the "draught" now, could it?
[17] I Feel a Draft

Don’t you know
Mr. Lincoln suspended the draft?
(Everyone looks toward his box and applauds.)

LINCOLN (standing and clapping with the audience)
Thank you, yes thank you, thank you all.
And thank you boys! Here’s to you!
(toself)
I feel a draft. It cuts right through.
I can’t get warm. Where’s my coat?
(He fetches it from a coat rack.)

MARY LINCOLN (watching him)
He looks so frail! He can’t eat.
Not while his boys lie outside.

LORD DUNDREARY (fishing around in his pockets) Mary, I’ve got it,
the draft of a letter!

MARY
the draft of a letter?

LORD DUNDREARY (still fishing)
a letter from Hillynoise, that’s in the reunited states.

AUDIENCE (laughter and cheers)
Hooray for the reunited states!

LORD DUNDREARY (still fishing)
I’m afraid I’ve no idea!
(aside)
and I’m afraid I do!
When my elder brother left for America,
a quarter century ago,
he never gave up his claim
to Dundreary manor.
And now I fear, after all these years,
his adopted heir, this Asa,
is coming to claim his inheritance.

A knock, which startles Emerson into forgetting his lines. Another knock.

MARY (as Keene, fiercely prompting Emerson)
Perhaps...

LORD DUNDREARY (flustered)
Perhaps...

MARY (as Keene, while the knocking continues)
Perhaps that’s... LORD DUNDREARY (struggling to remember) Perhaps that’s him now, Mary.

MARY (in character, but also as Keene, glaring at Emerson)
I’ll go and see.
(goes to the door and opens it)
Oh it’s you, Coyle.

COYLE (enters, bows)
That’s Mister Coyle, Miss Mary, Solicitor at Law.

MARY
Now coiled low.
I’ll leave you, Father.
(She exits.)

LORD DUNDREARY
Very well, my dear.
(turning to Coyle, sternly)
Mister Coyle, I must insist you treat my daughter with the respect which to a Dundreary is due.

COYLE (villainously)
I shall, your lordship, oh I shall.
May I have a word with you?
(secretively)
It’s a delicate matter that intimately concerns us three.

[18] Asa’s Letter

— Aria —

(reading haltingly)
“to you,
Lord Beauregard Dundreary, and, if I may be so bold to spell, to my dear Angly cousin, Mary, whom I have heard tell.”

Why, the poor madman! He thinks we’re related!
“I bet you never give a thought of readin’ anythin’ from me,
the last of themerican Dundrearies!
But. Every since I was knee-high to the cornstalks that grows most evrywheres in Hillynoise
I have dreamed of visitin’ with your Angeland and meetin’ my onliest Angly kinfolks, which, my dear Beauregard and Mary, is you.”

(spoken)
Angling for an invitation?
(reads) “Wal, to pop the bobwhite quail that’s flown the bush, it jusso happens, there’s this ainshyunt busyness atouchin’ the Dundreary clan that somewhat nearly calls upon yurs truley to come acrossing, where I beg you to receive, fer no more. I imagine, then a month er two, yur longest American cuzzin and yur friend in deed, Asa Dundreary, railroad magnet.”

Asa Dundreary!
Why, he must be the orphan
Uncle Ebenezer took in!
(turning the paper over, and upside down)
Papa, what does he mean by this ancient business?
(Lady Mountchessington exits.)

LORD DUNDREARY
I’m afraid I’ve no idea!
(aside)
and I’m afraid I do!
When my elder brother left for America,
a quarter century ago,
he never gave up his claim
to Dundreary manor.
And now I fear, after all these years,
his adopted heir, this Asa,
is coming to claim his inheritance.

(Another knock.

MARY (as Keene, fiercely prompting Emerson)
Perhaps...

LORD DUNDREARY
Very well, my dear.
(turning to Coyle, sternly)
Mister Coyle, I must insist you treat my daughter with the respect which to a Dundreary is due.

COYLE (villainously)
I shall, your Lordship, oh I shall.
May I have a word with you?
(secretively)
It’s a delicate matter that intimately concerns us three.
Scene 2: A Moneyed Man

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(A near-sighted, unbespectacled Gussy enters reading, holding her novel rather close to her face. An animated Lady Mountchessington enters, and flurries across to her.)

Lady Mountchessington
Oh Gussy, I've just received the most auspicious piece of news! Our hosts expect a lengthy visit from their long lost American cousin—a boundlessly wealthy, eminently eligible railroad magnet.

Gussy (clutching her novel to her bosom)
An American Dundreary? How utterly romantic! A solitary spirit in his corn-skin cap tracking game and bifurcating rails!

Lady Mountchessington
Gussy, isn't that "splitting rails"?

Gussy (with a wave of her hand)
Bifurcating, splitting... in any event, that unsullied heart makes certain there's enough to go around.

Lady Mountchessington
I'm sure he has a heart of gold.

Gussy (sighing)
Oh, ma, I'm so tired of admiring things I hate.
Money's so... it's so... material!

Lady Mountchessington
Money? Why, Gussy, money's the least material thing in the world!

Aria—

A moneyed man is trim. His pockets do not bulge.
He is light-hearted.
The more he has the less of it is there.
A moneyed man's sublime, his holdings are immense. There are dizzying vaults and breathtaking prospects in his speculative stare.
A moneyed man's an artist; he inspires confidence.
He wraps you up in his imagination until your dreams are his.
Nothing, in sum, could be more romantic, nothing less material than an authentic, an ethereal, a really moneyed man.

Lady Mountchessington
Then see you turn your reading to account!

Scene 3: Introductions

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

Binny (enters, closing the door quickly behind him)
Pardon me, my lady, but there's a houtdoorsman waiting in the hall, who rudely maintains he's Lord Dundreary's cousin!

Lady Mountchessington
Oh, show him in at once, Binny!

Binny (recovering his bearing)
Ahem. Ahem! May I announce Mhisteh...

He is light-hearted.
The more he has the less of it is there.
A moneyed man's an artist; he inspires confidence.
He wraps you up in his imagination until your dreams are his.
Nothing, in sum, could be more romantic, nothing less material than an authentic, an ethereal, a really moneyed man.

Lady Mountchessington
Then see you turn your reading to account!
ASA That’s Cousin!
BINNY
Cousin Ahssa
ASA That’s “A-sa” with an elongated A.
Don’t let yer tongue go slock.
BINNY (thoroughly discombobulated)
A-sa Dundreary of Hillynoise.
(exits)
LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (proffering her hand)
May I introduce myself? I am Lady Mountchessington, your family’s most highly valued friend, and this is my only daughter, Augusta, heiress to the name Mountchessington, but you may call her Gussy.
LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (turning to Gussy)
Now Gussy, present cousin Dundreary your hand.
Gussy (extending her hand, speaking in broken American) Oh ma, I was a-fixin’ to!
LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON
My daughter is devoted to your fabulously rich American tongue.
Gussy (shaking instead of kissing her hand)
Pleased to meet you!
ASA (shaking instead of kissing her hand)
Hit the ground with a thump, like wet snow off a dead branch. Which startles me awake.
That possum Hawk, he ain’t half tall enough, but he’s sure common enough for me.
Fact is, I’m hard to look at, difficult to see.
— Aria —
Flatboat feet, mail-order legs, arms that dangle, like the Original Gorilla. Honest Apes, the Mising Links, oh yes, they like to blacken me, make me hard to look at, difficult to see. But I’m stuck with a pair of popcorn ears, holler cheeks, a burrowing mole Matt Brady couldn’t chase away, make it less hard to look at, difficult to see. To look at me, it must be hard to figure how I’ll make it through another day, but all in all, I’ve got a hardy constitution, a hardy U. S. Constitution, hardy saving that peculiar institution, lodged securely there in the foundation, taking root and growing in native soil that all these years has clouded my gray eyes. Our founding fathers hushed those shameful words, “slavery” and “slave,” making the thing that’s so hard to look at, difficult to see. But like any affliction, a canker or a vine, if you don’t destroy it, it spreads and overgrows, and cracks your house in two, and then you can see no other way. The vine must be removed. To save the life of the nation, the branch must be cut free, free to live and let live in one nation of common-looking men and women, hard to look at, difficult to see.
Scene 4: In the Library

Dundreary Manor

(Lord Dundreary sits at his desk, buried in legal documents and bills. Coyle, dipping into his voluminous valise, inundates him with more and more bills.)

COYLE
... and in arrears to Doctor Phlegm for fifty two pints of medicinal bitters...

LORD DUNDREARY (exasperated, breaking in) Confound it, Coyle!
What do I pay you for if not to dispense with these infernal tradesmen?
Have you made out a total?

COYLE (opening an account book and consulting it)
Yes, milord.
It comes to four thousand eight hundred and sixty pounds, nine shillings and sixpence.

LORD DUNDREARY
Sixpence?

COYLE (shutting the account book)
Nine shillings and sixpence, four thousand eight hundred and sixty pounds.

LORD DUNDREARY
Zounds! Is there no mistake?

COYLE
I'm afraid there's no mistake.

LORD DUNDREARY
Very well, Coyle. Very well. (scribbling with a quill)
We must make ends meet.
I hereby grant you power to mortgage the estate.

COYLE
Milord, I regret to say, Dundreary Manor is... entirely encumbered.

LORD DUNDREARY (shocked) Encumbered!

COYLE
Mortgaged to my father.

LORD DUNDREARY (uncomprehending)
Your father? My father's agent?

COYLE (reverently)
Your father's industrious agent, my father, Litigius Coyle, who rescued the manor from ruin.

LORD DUNDREARY
But, is there no release?

COYLE
(His hand involuntarily grasps his breast pocket.)
No release, milord.

LORD DUNDREARY
Good Lord! What's to be done?
COYLE (delicately)
I do see one solution.

LORD DUNDREARY (impatient)
Well?

COYLE
Marry your daughter to the mortgagee.

LORD DUNDREARY (dumbfounded)
You mean… to you?

COYLE
I am prepared to clear your debts and settle your estate, the day Miss Dundreary becomes Lady Coyle.

LORD DUNDREARY (awestruck)
Lady Coyle?

COYLE (proceeding quickly)
Naturally, as her father, you would retain all appearances, that is, appurtenances, proper to your supernumerary role of aging patriarch.

LORD DUNDREARY (waving a fistful of papers)
You insolent scoundrel!

COYLE (bowing)
Yes, your lordship.
I’ll wait just outside while you consider my humble proposition.

(Coyle leaves Lord Dundreary sitting, head in hands.)

Scene 5: Musical Chairs

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(Asa enters from outside through French doors with Lady Mountchessington and Gussy clutching either arm.)

ASA (instantly sniffing out his villainy)
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands, introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What’s the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.

(Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary,
who enters in work clothes. When she sees the guest, she wipes her hands, removes her dairy
apron, and crosses the room smiling.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa)
Poor child! Raised without a mother,
all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don’t think she knows she’s a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)
A hard-working, self-reliant woman!

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary’s hands,
introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What is the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client’s daughter!

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA
You may.
ASA (enchanted)
To look at you, Miss Dundreary,
I honestly can’t remember.

LORD DUN Dreary (repositioning Coyle before Mary)
Now Mary, Solicitor Coyle merits your consideration.

MARY (alarmed, aside to Lord Dundreary)
Father, what’s the matter?

ASA (retaking his position)
I wonder, might I visit your dairy?

MARY (smiling indulgently)
Have you any experience in animal husbandry?

ASA
No ma’am, I have not.
I never husbanded anythin’.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (aside to Gussy)
Gussy, don’t lose him!

BINNY (entering, grandly)
Ladies and gentlemen,
dinner awaits.
(The guests in line behind him, Binny leads the way into the dining room to a large table, laden with covered dishes.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Binny)
Binny, you nincompoop,
The American sits between us!

BINNY (to Lady Mountchessington)
Yes, your Ladyship,
(to Aisa)
You’re between these ladies.

ASA (sternly, to Binny)
I’m alongside Miss Mary. (aside to Coyle)
You’re in the wrong seat.

COYLE (to Asa)
You’re in the wrong estate!

MARY (to Gussy)
Gussy, will you trade places?

GUSSEY (politely, to Mary)
I’m going to be sick!

ASA
I’m gonna marry Mary!

MARY
I’ve got to talk to father!

ACT II

ASA (hedges)
Wal now, Mary, as to why I’ve come...
I’d better backtrack a bit.
Before I could cipher my ma took milk sick from a snake-rooted cow.
Pa never got over it,
and he followed her down.
Wal now, your uncle Ebenezer,

ELISIE
Don’t tell me the herd’s still browsing clover!
The night’s at hand. Round up our capital!

LORD DUN Dreary
Now Mary, Solicitor Coyle merits your consideration.

MARY (alarmed, aside to Lord Dundreary)
Father, what’s the matter?

ASA (retaking his position)
I wonder, might I visit your dairy?

MARY (smiling indulgently)
Have you any experience in animal husbandry?

ASA
No ma’am, I have not.
I never husbanded anythin’.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (aside to Gussy)
Gussy, don’t lose him!

BINNY (entering, grandly)
Ladies and gentlemen,
dinner awaits.
(The guests in line behind him, Binny leads the way into the dining room to a large table, laden with covered dishes.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Binny)
Binny, you nincompoop,
The American sits between us!

BINNY (to Lady Mountchessington)
Yes, your Ladyship,
(to Aisa)
You’re between these ladies.
he always doted on my ma, and he took me in. He had no son. I had no kin. Wal, one lowdown Febuyware dear Ebenezer meets up with a winter ague. He was shivery one minute and wringing wet the next. “Asa, my boy,” and painful slow he sez it, “Asa, my boy.” I kin hear him still! “This leetle sheet a paper,” he sez, tugging this parchment foolsrap from under his bearskin bedding, “this leetle sheet…” Mary, do you mind if i light up a ceegar? this story’s so all-fired gloomy i reckon i’d lose my way to the end without a light. (she nods; he strikes a match and lights up.) “When i pass,” whistles Ebenezer, with a voice no loudern a dove’s, “this leetle sheet a paper will make you the present of all my Hillynoise rail estate, and all my angly holdings, specially Dundreary manor and dairy, which by rights belongs to me” Mary (standing, surprised and angry) so, if i understand you aright, you’ve come to claim possession. [6] Mary and Abraham LINCOLN (absorbed, to himself) Blueray smoke and ashes… (cloud) Mary, I’ve been thinking. We’ve had a hard time of it since we came out to Washington. Now this pestilent war is over, I’m near done for. MARY LINCOLN Abraham, don’t say such things! LINCOLN Well, Mary, if saying made it so… But anyhow I’ve been thinking. After my second term, I’d like to take up the Law again, back in Springfield maybe, or Chicago. Maybe I’ll start shaving. Mary, what do you say? MARY LINCOLN I say we need a holiday! LINCOLN (fired up) A holiday? Say! You know, Mary, we’ve got some money put by. Before we settle down for good, let’s jest run off to California! What would you think about that? (Leaning toward her, he takes her hand.) MARY LINCOLN (delighted, glancing over her shoulder at Miss Harris and Major Rathbone) Now, Abraham, what will Miss Harris think with you hanging onto me so? LINCOLN (also exuberant) Why, they’re in love, they won’t think anything! (looking out over the audience) Say Mary, isn’t that General Burnside? Back there, with the brushfire whiskers? (peering, they lean forward) [7] Sic Semper Booth BOOTH (mantic, rehearsing outside the Presidential box) Sic semper… sic semper… sic semper… Booth! Fired with drink, bursting with flame, catching, leaping, spreading my name— John Wilkes Booth forever! I will strike boldly from the shadows without warning from close behind— one glorious act never to be forgotten. Sic semper Booth, beloved assassin! Thus William Tell waxing his bow, thus Brutus polishing his blade, thus Booth forever dethrones a Pretender and erects his name. Sic semper Booth, the last Shakespearean. My brother, Edwin, Prince Hamlet of Boston, and Junius, my father, poor Richard the Dead, will be peeling on posters forgotten and faded while I, John Wilkes, will still be resounding in lessons and legends louder forever and ever sic semper sic semper…

Tonight I retire from the stage and enter History!

veteran 1 (watching Asa smoking)

Don’t that ceegee smell fine!

Say friend, hows about a smoke?

veteran 2

Hush! that ain’t for real. He’s jest pretending!

veteran 1, with others

Hush! Hush!

Scene 2: Assassination

Dunreary Manor

(Lady Mountchessington and Gussy, hunting for Asa. Lady Mountchessington sets her sights on him, and alerts her daughter.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

Ah, Mister Dunreary, we were just speculating on your skills as a marksman. ASA (looking at the President’s box)

Wal, I guess it’s like most things: just keep that bullion sun outta your eyes, judge your distance and fire.

GUSSY

Oh Mister Dunreary, you hit the cowseye! Farsighted souls don’t set their sights on bullion.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (taking him cordially yet firmly by the arm, motions Gussy to his other side)

Truly, my dear Asa, we care only for your billions—i mean your brilliance.

ASA (pausing, eyes them closely)

But… what if my sunbeams turned out to be pyrites?

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (somewhat confused, but enthusiastic)

Pyrites? Why, I suppose there’s no harm in gathering a few pyrites that drop into your lap from Heaven!

ASA

Pyrites is fool’s gold, ladies, I’m penniless! But I’m sure you both agree, that’s no impediment to affectious souls like us. To tell the truth, ladies, I’m ‘lin’ over with affections, and I’m ready to pour ‘em all over you, like applesauce over roast pork! (turning to Gussy, unsure how to react)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (horrified, retrieves her daughter)

Augusta, to your room!

GUSSY

But ma, maybe I am affectious like he says. (runs off weeping)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (sternly)

Mister Dunreary, it is becoming increasingly clear that you are woefully illiterate in the manners of Christian society. (parades off)

ASA (exultant)

Wal now, lady treasure-chest I guess I found your hymnal page, you sock-dologizing ole man-trap! (Audience laughter and applause)

AUDIENCE MEMBER 1

Ho ho, sock-dologizing! I don’t get it. (A dull sound and smoke issue from the President’s box.)

BOOTH (lowering himself carefully onstage, catches his foot on the U.S. Flag; landing awkwardly, curses aside) Damned flag spoiled my leap! (limping to center stage, he strikes a heroic pose, swaying, dagger aloft) Sic semper tyrannis! (scattered laughter and applause)

AUDIENCE MEMBER 2

Seek who? Look sharp, Asa!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 1

What’s so blamed funny?

AUDIENCE MEMBER 3 to MEMBER 4

Say, that’s John Wilkes Booth! Who’s he supposed to be?

ASA (alone onstage behind Booth, ad libbing)

Wal now, I, uh, I, reckon that’s… (Hearing him, Booth whirls around, nearly collapsing)

ASA (recognizing him, blurs in disbelief)

John!? ( Booth slashes at him menacingly. Hawk first stares, then turns tail and runs offstage right, followed by Booth. The stage is empty. The audience is silent. The theater orchestra strikes up a faltering patriotic tune. The opera audience lights come on.)
AUDIENCE MEMBER 1 (finally standing up)
Say, what’s goin’ on here?
(More scattered laughter, applause)

AUDIENCE MEMBERS 3 and 4 (convulsing with laughter)
Hoho hoho!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 3
Down in front!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 4
It’s just a gag!

LAURA KEENE (striding onstage, arms aloft)
Ladies and gentlemen...
(Audience disquiet builds.)

EMERSON (rushing onstage, aside)
Miss Keene, you’re losing me!
(in character of Dundreary)

Now look what you’ve done, my pet, you’ve spoiled my magnificent sneeze!

MISS HARRIS
Miss Keene, bring water!

LAURA KEENE
What’s happening? What happened?

EMERSON (as Dundreary, persisting, oblivious)
Ah ahhh ahhhhhh...

MISS HARRIS
It’s the President!
He’s been shot!

(Audience disquiet builds.)

LAURA KEENE (turns back to the crowd, resolutely) Ladies, gentlemen,
please keep your seats!
All will be well, I assure you,
(faltering)
All will be...
(She rushes offstage.)

— Audience Chorus — (standing, panicked, some taking the stage, along with confused and frightened cast members; A = all; J = justice; M = mercy)

AUDIENCE A Shot? What? The President shot?

AUDIENCE J
Ahhhh! Shoot! Shoot! Ahhh shoot!

WOMAN
Mercy oh mercy! Mercy!

AUDIENCE M
Merciful Jesus, mercy!

MAN
Stop that man! It’s Booth!

AUDIENCE A Booth Booth Booth!

ANOTHER MAN
They’re lettin’ me git away!
He’s one a them! Them actors!

AUDIENCE J
Let’s burn the theater! Burn it!

AUDIENCE M
Mercy oh mercy!
Deliver us from this place!

ANOTHER WOMAN
Somebody’s frightened! Bring water!

ANOTHER MAN
Over here! Another’s down here!

MISS HARRIS
Is there a surgeon among you?

ANOTHER A Surgeon! A surgeon!
Save him, Jesus! Save him!

MAN
Outta my way, cripple!

ANOTHER MAN
Faster, you sons a bitches!

FREEDMAN (striking a threatening pose)
Wal, come on then!

ANOTHER MAN
Me first, cudjoe!

MISS HARRIS
Is that all the while we’re holding on, to each other,
by our hands—
and you reply having,
caught my high spirits,
she won’t, you say,
she won’t think anything,
anything about it, and am I,

[9] Scene 3: The Presidential Box

MARY LINCOLN (kneels over Lincoln)
And am I to give him?
And now, my God am I,
to give my husband?
What will become,
oh what on earth will,
Miss Harris, I say,
What will Miss,
Harris think of me—remember, darling?
hanging on, to you so?
What, will Miss Harris?
— all the while we’re holding on, to each other,
by our hands—
and you reply having,
cought my high spirits,
she won’t, you say,
she won’t think anything,
anything about it, and am I,
I ask, to give him up, to this awful place—?

AUDIENCE
Clear the way! Make way for the doctor! He’s an Army surgeon. Let him pass.

DOCTOR LEALE (forcing his way, in civilian clothes, kneels beside Lincoln, addressing Mary Lincoln) Missus Lincoln, I’m Doctor Leale.

MARY LINCOLN (lapsing back into her chair, but without acknowledging him)
If only, I hadn’t brought him to this awful place, this awful— I am in need, of a mourning bonnet, which must be exceedingly plain, and genteel, an impeccable, black straw, trimmed with the finest jet black English crepe, white and black crepe flowers, inexpressibly plain, yet rich, a black velvet headdress, trimmed with heartsease, heartsease before and behind, heartsease before and behind.

DOCTOR LEALE (kneeling before the rocker, checking Lincoln’s wrist for a pulse, and listening to his chest)
No pulse, almost no pulse; some breathing, labored breathing.

MARY LINCOLN (continuing without pause or response)
I implore you, exercise your taste, to the utmost! A coronet wreath, with simple black crepe myrtle, a purple silk velveteen headdress of the exact shade, of the flowers, a bow also on the purple, with a loop, bows and loops, in front and back, without they are of the best, I cannot endure them! I will require ruche flutings of Mechlin lace, the very finest and blackest and lightest, long crepe veil, a shimmery black silk mesh—folded round for summer—the weather, of a sudden, is so beautiful, the wonder is, we cannot feel well—

DOCTOR LEALE (turning to those in the Statebox)
Men, help me lay him out, lay him flat out on the floor.

MARY LINCOLN (crossing over, stands over her)
It’s Mary, isn’t it? And even marries Mary, instead of me?

DOCTOR LEALE (threading the fingers of both hands slowly back through Lincoln’s hair)
I’ve found a head wound!

LAURA KEENE (shaken, looking up)
I’m Laura Keene. You have mistaken me.

MARY LINCOLN (triumphant)
Oh I don’t believe so, I know you, I should have known, you are an actress, you never marry, you never settle down, you joke, you are intemperate, you pretend you live in this awful place, this awful, place!

DOCTOR LEALE (regaining his presence of mind)
The passageway’s clear, smooth and clear. I can pass my little finger through. He’s breathing steadily. I have his pulse. The blood must not congeal.

LAURA KEENE
Will he live?

DOCTOR LEALE (looking off, struggling for self-control)
His wound is mortal. It is impossible for him to recover.
MARY LINCOLN
Where’s my veil!
I will not leave this box without my veil.

DOCTOR LEALE
He must be moved.
He’s not safe in this place.
Break off that door for a cot.
We’ll take him to Petersen House.
And keep these women away!

LAURA KEENE (rising, aghast)
My God, I’m drenched in his blood!

MATHEWS (pacing backstage, unseen by Hawk, agitated) What’s happening here? What happened?
I’m supposed to be foiled by now.
Wasn’t that Booth, in the President’s box?
Tumbling onstage, waving that dagger of his?
Who called for a shot, and a dagger?
Was the President part of the gag?
Was the President—?
The house went mad—
No, I won’t believe it!
But something really happened.
Somebody put on a play.
And did I take a part?
What was it Booth handed me?
What did I take from his hands?
(pulls the letter out, tears it open, and scans it in disbelief)

— Duet —
MATHEWS and BOOTH
“To my Countrymen, who have outlived their Country—
Our Nation was founded for the white man, not the black, and for one...

But that tyrant Emancipator, who devours the young...
Something decisive and great must be performed...
I bless the entire world,
but I am bound, too like MacBeth, to the cross ties of my Destiny.
‘Bearlike I must fight the course...’
Signed...

MATHEWS (crushing the letter in his hands)
Liar, reciter, pretender, impostor, hashish eater,... actor!
Did you think yourself a man of consequence because you’d mouthed the lines of Shakespeare’s kings?
The crowds were awestruck, and you believed them!
And who am I? Your breathless messenger?
I should have known! I knew you!
But I pocketed your letter, and now...
(looking around furtively, clutching the letter)
Take care, Jack!
They’re looking for actors out there.
If they find you with this, they’ll lynch you on the spot.
Get rid of it, drop it, burn it!
Whatever you do, you’ll carry it to your grave.
(unsure what to do, Mathews catches Hawk’s attention. Mathews hastily tries to hide the letter, but Hawk restrains him.)

HAWK
Say Jack, what’s that you’re spiriting away?

— Duet —
MATHEWS
A letter. It’s... private.

HAWK
Anybody dead inside it?

MATHEWS
Inside, and at the borders.

HAWK
The damning document?
The villain’s tragic oversight?
Then it’s a property of the stage.
The curtain’s down.
You’re still in costume.
Let it burn away forever.
Act like nothing ever happened, that nothing ever does.

MATHEWS
Let it burn?

HAWK
Away forever.

MATHEWS
Like it never happened?

HAWK
Nothing ever does.
(\text{Mathews lights the paper. As it burns away, Hawk pulls out a whiskey flask, and hands it to Mathews.)
A drink to the lot of us!

MATHEWS (hesitating, then drinking)
To the awful lot of us!
(\text{Two soldiers appear. One pokes the ashes, the other confiscates the flask. The two pairs eye each other suspiciously.)}
SOLDIERS
You’re actors, ain’t you?
(They nod in unison.)
We’ll have a word with you.
We’d like to question you as to your whereabouts, and your associations.
We’ve got our orders.
We don’t want no trouble.
Come along now, boys.
Come along.
— Duet —
MATHEWS and HAWK
You’ve got the wrong man!
We didn’t do it!
We didn’t do a thing.
if only we’d done something.
We acted like always,
like nothing ever happens.
Remand us to our custody.
you won’t regret it.
We’ll keep an eye on us.
We may not be red-handed, but we’re guilty—we know it—of something,
of everything we did not do.
soldiers
(often-suffering)
OK boys, OK now.
thanks fer the little show,
but it’s time to come along.
(Hawk and Mathews are led away.)

[12] Scene 5: Blood Stains
On the stage, Laura Keene (Distractedly, Laura Keene enters backstage)
— Aria —
Quick, somebody, quick, before it soaks, before it spreads!
It’s oozed out on my moiré silk, and spattered up my underskirts.
It’s in my hair, and on my hands.
I open Monday in Cincinnati.
I’ve got to scrub it, flush it out.
It’s in my nose, and in my eyes.
I’ll never get it out of my sight.
Somebody quick get me a cake of Windsor soap and cold salt water.
Everything I touch is splotched.
(succeeding with effort in recollecting herself)
All through these fratricidal years
I’ve kept our theater alive.
The playwrights, plays, and playbills,
the patented effects;
The litigations, the bookings;
The piecemeal arrivals of tableaux, costumes, actors,
My beloved Chickering upright.
But I couldn’t keep the bloodshed out;
I couldn’t keep the war from breaking in.
Should I have lowered and hushed our curtains, and waited for the fury to play itself out?
Tonight was a good and a festive Friday.
The people paraded in to laugh away at a harmless comedy and to swell our patriotic chorus.
Was I wrong, all these years,
to hold open our doors?
Was I wrong to believe that art brings peace?
(As the aria subsides, a shadowy figure appears behind Laura Keene.)

LINCOLN (interrupting her)
Pardon me, Miss Keene.
LAURA KEENE (startled, frightened)
Who is it? Who are you?
LINCOLN
I hate to disturb you.
I was wondering,
when will the play
pick up again?
I wouldn’t ask,
but I’m kind of tired.
I feel awful short-winded for a tall man.
Is it near through?
LAURA KEENE (suspecting who it is)
The play is over, for tonight at least.
Something horrible happened.
Somebody shot somebody.
LINCOLN
That’s terrible.
It always is.
I always hated violence.
I never owned a gun.
So there’s no concert?
No “Honor to our Soldiers”?
LAURA KEENE
I’m afraid, Mister, the orchestra’s disbanded.
LINCOLN
I can’t carry a tune two feet before I spill it, but I love to hear them that can.
I love to laugh out loud.
My jaw-bones ached today to bust out laughing.
Old Dun dreary,
he tickles me.
He acts just like he’s fighting bees.
(He laughs.)
My favorite play of all’s Macbeth.
I think it’s wonderful.
“Duncan is in his grave.
After life’s fitful fever he sleeps well. Treason has done his worst.
Nor steel, nor poison, malice domestic,
foreign levy, nothing, can touch him further.”
That’s about it, I think.
LAURA KEENE
That’s the way I remember it.
(pauses)
Oh Mister President, don’t you really know what happened?
(Keene waits for an answer, which never comes. Finally, the audience is heard, as though in response.)

[14] Final Chorus

AUDIENCE
Funny, how hard it is to remember, to piece it all together, to pick up the threads and thrums of what happened, what shreds and ravelings might someday save us. There was a passing blur, a churning, a blotch. Already it runs together. Blood will have blood for blood until every drop drawn with a lash shall be paid with another drawn with a gun.

For Hispañola, Jamestown, Charleston, Harper’s Ferry for Manassas, Shiloh, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Marye’s Heights, Chancellorsville, for Gettysburg, for Little Round Top, Fort Wagner, for Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Spotsylvania, Libby Prison for Atlanta, Petersburg for Appomattox, Ford’s Theater for blood for blood... E pluribus pluribus pluribus—already it runs together. It was good and dark, a bean-pod burst. It tasted funny, but it was food.

THE END

This libretto is dedicated to the memory of Jim Okansis (1922–2001). © 2007 John Shoptaw

Eric Sawyer’s music is frequently performed on both coasts of the United States, including New York City’s Weill Recital Hall and Merkin Concert Hall, and at the Tanglewood Music Center, as well as in England, France, Germany, and most recently in Romania and Bulgaria. Recent performances include works on programs by the Brentano String Quartet, San Jose Chamber Orchestra, Ensemble Phoenix, Radius Ensemble, Laurel Trio, Now and Then Chamber Players, Aurelius Ensemble, Opera Longy, Ives Quartet, Arden Quartet, Lighthouse Chamber Players, Earplay, and Empyrean. He completed a residency at the Center for New Music and Acoustic Technologies at University of California, Berkeley, resulting in the premiere of Itasca for voices and live electronics, in collaboration with John Shoptaw and choreographer Wendy Woodson.

Sawyer has received the Joseph H. Bearns Prize in Music, a First Music commission from the New York Youth Symphony, awards from the Tanglewood Music Center and the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and has held fellowships from the MacDowell Colony and Harvard University. He appears frequently as a solo and chamber pianist, recently on programs by Empyrean, Lighthouse Chamber Players, and Composers in Red Sneakers, and is the founding director of the critically acclaimed contemporary ensemble Longitude. Following four years as Chair of Composition and Theory at the Longy School of Music, Sawyer joined the composition faculty of Amherst College in the fall of 2002. Previously, he has taught composition and theory at the University of California, Santa Cruz, Wellesley College, and MIT. Sawyer received his undergraduate musical training at Harvard College, and completed his graduate studies at Columbia University and the University of California, Davis. His teachers have included Leon Kirchner, Ross Bauer, Tison Street, Andrew Imbrie, Thomas Benjamin, and George Edwards. His chamber music compilation String Works and his cantata The Humble Heart are available on compact disc from Albany Records.

John Shoptaw was raised in the Missouri Bootheel, the state’s poverty belt, where his first jobs included picking cotton and stacking lumber in the local mill. He began college at Southeast Missouri State Teachers’ College, and graduated from the University of Missouri at Columbia, with a degree in physics. He returned as a special student, and received undergraduate degrees in English and Comparative Literature. Upon graduating, he won the University award in Greek and Latin language.

Mr. Shoptaw attended graduate school at Harvard University, winning there a Merit and a Whiting Fellowship. He received his PhD from Harvard in English and American Literature. His dissertation, on the poetry of John Ashbery, On the Outside Looking Out: John Ashbery’s Poetry, was rewritten and published by Harvard University Press.

After graduating from Harvard, he taught in the English Department at Princeton University, where he received the Andrew W. Mellon Preceptorship, and at Yale University, before he transferred with his wife (a professor in Classics at Yale) and daughter to the English Department of the University of California, Berkeley, where he now teaches American poetry and poetry writing. Since his study on Ashbery, he has published articles in the lyric theory (e.g., “Lyric Cryptography,” Poetics Today) and on American poetry (e.g., “Listening to Dickinson,” Representations). Since joining the UC Berkeley English Department, Mr. Shoptaw has shifted his primary focus to creative writing, the first result of which is his libretto for Our American Cousin. He is currently finishing his first book of poems, Navigator, a sequence dwelling on the Mississippi River basin. Some of these poems have been published in journals such as The Chicago Review and New American Writing. He also recently collaborated with Sawyer on a setting of “Itasca,” a poem from Navigator, recounting the discovery of the source of the Mississippi River, for four choreographed singers and electronics. It premiered at the Center for New Music and Audio Technology at UC Berkeley and was performed at Amherst College in October 2006.

Mallorie Chernin is Director of Choral Activities at Amherst College in Amherst, Massachusetts, where she coaches, teaches conducting, and conducts four choirs: the Concert Choir, Women’s Chorus, Men’s Glee Club, and Madrigal Singers. A native of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Ms. Chernin completed a Bachelor of Music degree in Music Education at the University of Wisconsin in Madison. She holds a Master of Music degree in Choral Conducting from Westminster Choir College located in Princeton, New Jersey. Prior to becoming Director of Choral Activities at Amherst College in 1986, Ms. Chernin served on faculties at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, Smith College, and Hampshire College. In addition to her position at Amherst College, Ms. Chernin is in frequent demand as an adjudicator, clinician, and guest conductor.

Janna Baty (Laura Keene/Mary Dundreary), soprano, has performed worldwide under the direction of prominent conductors including James Levine and Seiji Ozawa. Praised by The Boston Globe for her “rich, viola-like tone and a rapturous, luminous lyricism,” Ms. Baty has won several international competitions, including the XXI Concurso Internacional de Ejecución Musical “Dr. Luis Sigall” (Chile). She has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Daejeon Philharmonic (South Korea), Hamburgische Staatsoper, L'Orchestre National du Capitole de Toulouse, Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Tanglewood Music Festival. Her opera roles have included the Duchess (Powder Her Face), Alice Ford (Falstaff), and Anna and Elvira (Don Giovanni). Ms. Baty can be heard with the Boston Modern Opera Project on the critically acclaimed Naxos release Reza Vali: Flute Concerto/ Deylaman/ Folk Songs (Set No. 10).
Alan Schneider (Harry Hawk/Asa), tenor, is a principal artist with the Boston Lyric Opera and has performed with some of the best-known companies in the Northeast, including the Huntington Theatre Company, Opera Boston, Chautauqua Opera, and the Glimmerglass Opera Young American Artists Program. An advocate of new music, he has created roles in world premieres of works by Joseph Summer, Daniel Pinkham, and Paula Kimper. Mr. Schneider has appeared in a wide range of operas, including Salome, Don Carlos, Carmen and Rigoletto. A graduate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston University, he completed the Boston University Opera Institute with the title role in Mozart’s Idomeneo—the topic of a feature story in The Boston Globe by music critic Richard Dyer. Mr. Schneider is also founder of The American Singers’ Theater, which produces new American opera.

Aaron Engebreth (Jack Matthews/Coyle), baritone, praised by The Boston Globe for his “beauty of voice and eloquence,” has a wide-ranging career as a performer. He has appeared as a soloist with the Tanglewood Music Festival, Ravinia Music Festival, Opera Boston, Terezin Chamber Music Foundation, Boston Modern Orchestra Project, and Monadnock Music Festival. He is a frequent soloist with top early music organizations such as American Bach Soloists and the Handel and Haydn Society. A committed interpreter of contemporary music, Mr. Engebreth has collaborated with composers Nicolas Maw, Daniel Pinkham, Lukas Foss, John Deak, and Ned Rorem—most recently in preparation of the Boston premiere of Rorem’s evening-length song cycle, Evidence of Things Not Seen with the Florestan Recital Project. Mr. Engebreth has performed a variety of opera roles, from Count Almaviva in Le Nozze di Figaro to Schaunard in La bohème, and has appeared with Keith Lockhart, conductor of the Boston Pops, performing works of Richard Rodgers, with Lockhart at the piano.

Drew Poling (Ned Emerson/Lord Dundreary), baritone, is a performer of astonishing versatility and appears with equal ease on opera, concert, and recital stages as well as those of the musical theater. His opera roles, from Aeneas to Henry Kissinger, draw on repertoire from all musical periods and include Count Almaviva, Rossini’s Figaro, Hérode, Gianni Schicchi, La Bohème’s Marcello, and Albert Herring’s Vicar. An avid performer of new music, Mr. Poling has sung the American debuts of several major new works. In 1999, he debuted George Benjamin’s Sometime Voices at Tanglewood, a piece The New York Times hailed as “a masterpiece” and a performance The Boston Globe described as “unspeakably beautiful.” He made his Boston Symphony Orchestra debut in Oliver Knussen’s Where the Wild Things Are and was featured to critical acclaim as the First Lion in Lucas Foss’s Griffelkin with the Boston Modern Orchestra Project. Mr. Poling reprised his role on the world premiere recording of the work released on the Chandos label. In 2004, he appeared as Henry Kissinger in Nixon in China under the baton of Gil Rose. In 2006, again under Maestro Rose, he was featured as Roy Cohn in the American premiere of Peter Eötvös’ Angels in America, an opera based on the Pulitzer Prize–winning play by Tony Kushner. Variety wrote of his performance, “Roy Cohn (baritone Drew Poling) dazzles.”

Donald Wilkinson (Abraham Lincoln), baritone, enjoys a distinguished career in concert, opera, oratorio, recital, and contemporary music, and has appeared throughout the United States and Canada. He made his European debut performing the role of Dionysos in the world premiere of Theodore Antoniou’s opera, The Bacchae, at the Acropolis in Athens, Greece. Since that debut he has appeared in Finland, Sweden, Germany, France, England, and Holland. Mr. Wilkinson has performed as a soloist with Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Christopher Hogwood and the Handel and Haydn Society (a U.S. tour of Bach’s Missa Brevis in G Minor), and the symphony orchestras of Pittsburgh, Evansville, Jacksonville, Springfield (Massachusetts), Portland (Maine), and Vermont. Since 1984, he has been a soloist in Emmanuel Music’s famed Bach Cantata Series, formerly under the direction of Craig Smith. Highly sought after for his interpretations of Bach, in 2003 he made his debut at the Northwest Bach Festival (Spokane) in Bach’s Christmas Oratorio and Mozart’s Requiem under the direction of Gunther Schuller. He has also appeared at the Bach festivals of Carmel and Philadelphia, and is featured on Emmanuel Music’s recordings of Bach’s Christmas Cantatas (Koch International Classics). His discography also includes the title role on the internationally acclaimed Johnny Johnson by Kurt Weill (Erato Disques), Angels with the Boston Camerata (Erato), John Harbison’s Recordare (Koch International Classics), David Patterson’s song cycle Last Words (Albany Records) and the recently released The Jesuit Operas with Ensemble Abendmusik (Dorian Recordings). In 1990, he was awarded a fellowship to the Tanglewood Music Festival. Mr. Wilkinson teaches voice at Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Phillips Academy Andover.

Angela Hines Gooch (Mary Lincoln), soprano, has performed with various ensembles including the Red Mountain Chamber Orchestra, Alabama Symphony Orchestra, the Florestan Recital Project, and with conductors David Itkin, Karen Keltner and in Orvieto, Italy with conductor Nyela Basney. She has performed various operatic roles including Nella in Gianni Schicchi, Sophie in Der Rosenkavalier, Lucy in The Telephone, and Norina in Don Pasquale. Her most recent performances include The Little Prince and L’enfant et les Sortilèges with Opera Theatre of Weston as well as Candide, The Crucible, The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny with Opera Boston. She has also performed with and is one of the hosts of Opera Boston Underground. Ms. Gooch is an accomplished pianist and has also worked as music director for the Birmingham Opera Theatre, Birmingham Summerfest, and Children’s Theatres, as well as the Opera Theatre of Weston at Vermont’s Historic Weston Playhouse. She has served on the faculty at Boston University, Tanglewood Young Artist Vocal Program, and is the head of the voice and opera department at the Walnut Hill School for the Arts. Ms. Gooch most recently has been honored by the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts and named in the Who’s Who Among American Teachers.

Tom O’Toole (John Wilkes Booth), bass-baritone, appeared most recently as Alaska Wolf Joe in Opera Boston’s critically acclaimed production of Kurt Weill’s Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny. Other recent New England appearances include Escamillio in Carmen (Granite State Opera), Gazella in Lucrezia Borgia (Opera Boston), Friedrich Bhaer in Little Women (Boston Opera Project), Basilio in Il barbiere di Siviglia (Commonwealth Opera), and Aldoròn in La Cenerentola (Raylynmor Opera, New Hampshire). His additional credits include Germont (La Traviata) and Father in Hänsel und Gretel. As a member of the 2006 Sarasota Opera Studio, Mr. O’Toole appeared in La Bohème and covered principal roles in Mozart’s Le Nozze di Figaro and Verdi’s I Masnadieri.

Hillarie O’Toole (Gussy Mountchessington), soprano, is equally at home in both opera and musical comedy. Ms. O’Toole’s recent roles include Sarah Brown in Commonwealth Opera’s production of Guys and Dolls and Amy in BASOTTI’s San Francisco premiere of Little Women. She is a past recipient of the Mikanna Clark Taurmann scholarship for voice from the international music fraternity Mu Phi Epsilon. Other roles she has performed include Papagena in Die Zauberflöte, Polly Peachum in The Threepenny Opera, Madame Heart in Der Schauspieldirektor, Eileen in Wonderful Town, Fiona in Brigadoon, and My Fair Lady’s Eliza Doolittle. In 2004, she premiered the role of Esther in The Captivation of Eunice Williams with Old Deerfield Productions, appeared with the production’s Canadian premiere in 2005, and again with the 2006 Smithsonian Institute production in Washington, DC. She has been a featured soloist in concerts with the Keene Chorale, Clark University, Northampton Academy of Music, and Commonwealth Opera. She holds a Master’s degree in Music Performance from Syracuse University. Her studies also brought her to the American Institute of Musical Studies in Graz, Austria. She currently resides in South Hadley, Massachusetts where she is the Music Instruction Coordinator of the Berkshire Hills Music Academy, a post-graduate school for gifted musicians with cognitive and learning disabilities, and additionally serves on the voice faculty of the Northampton Community Music Center.

Janice Edwards (Lady Mountchessington), mezzo–soprano, has appeared frequently with opera companies and orchestras throughout New England since moving to New Hampshire in 1999. Granite State Opera appearances have included Marcellina in Le Nozze di Figaro, Suzuki in Madame Butterfly, and the Mother in Amahl and the Night Visitors. Her repertoire includes the principal Wagner and Verdi heroines as well as the major concert works of Mahler, Bach, Beethoven, and Handel with organizations both in the U.S. and in Europe (Arizona Opera, Kentucky Opera, New Hampshire Music Festival, New Hampshire Symphony, Pioneer Valley Symphony, Portland Symphony Orchestra, Prague Radio Symphony Orchestra, Dvořák Summer Music Festival, Karlsbad Symphony Orchestra, Janáček Philharmonic, and the Danish Sinfonietta, among others). Recent engagements have included Farewell, Vienna, a play with music about the life and music of Erich Wolfgang Korngold in Portland, Oregon. Upcoming engagements include Mama Lucia with Granite State Opera’s Cavalleria Rusticana and Brahms’s Alto Rhapsodie with the Portsmouth Men’s Chorus. In addition to her performing engagements, Ms. Edwards has an active voice studio in Manchester, NH.

Daniel Kamalic (Doctor Leale), baritone, is an advocate of new and rarely-performed works, and has performed in such roles as Dupoirier in Granite State Opera’s workshop premiere of Thomas Oboe Lee’s Oscar Wilde, and Orpheus in the first–ever American performance of Matthew Locke’s The Empress of Morocco as part of “Filthy/Rich,” the Vox Consort’s critically-acclaimed concert in partnership with the Spare Change Homeless Empowerment Project. This season, he will join the New England Light Opera to perform the roles of Cox and Lycidas in two rarely produced Gilbert and Sullivan operettas, Cox and Box and Happy Arcadia. Other engagements include, with Opera Boston: Joseph in La Vie Parisienne, the Chief of Police in L’Étoile, Ben in The Telephone (ongoing); with Granite State Opera: Speaker/First Priest/Armored Man in The Magic Flute, Marullo in Rigoletto; and with Connecticut Lyric Opera: Masetto in Don Giovanni, Mercutio in Romeo et Juliette.

The Amherst College Concert Choir, now thirty years old, is one of four ensembles at Amherst College, known collectively as the Amherst College Choral Society. The Concert Choir performs for various college functions, provides full concert programs both on and off campus, and has toured in the United States, Japan, Austria, Italy, the former Soviet Union, Poland, Czech Republic, and Hungary. The repertoire of the Concert Choir contains a great variety of music written throughout the ages, from the Renaissance to the 20th Century. Selections are both sacred and secular, and are sung in a variety of languages and styles.

Mallorie Chernin, music director
Katherine Vogele, assistant director

SOPRANO
Jessica Chung
Isabel Duarte-Gray
Cassidy Fitzpatrick
Leigh Harris
Elly Jessop
Tara Kulkarni
Katherine Vogele
Katherine Willis

ALTO
Katherine Choi
Zoe Fenson
Elizabeth Minkel
Leslie Moclock
Samanta Ostrowski
Katherine Wu Hannah Zhang

TENOR Todd Fruth
Mark Knapp
Wesley Ringel
Joseph Smeall

BASS
Sam Bass
Jay Buchman
David Grimes
Marshall Nannes
Alexander Smith
Ben Vincent
Ross Wolfarth
Gil Rose is recognized as one of a new generation of American conductors shaping the future of classical music. His orchestral and operatic performances and recordings have been recognized by critics and fans alike. In 1996, Gil Rose founded the Boston Modern Orchestra Project (Bmop), the leading professional orchestra in the country dedicated exclusively to performing and recording music of the 20th and 21st centuries. Under his leadership, Bmop’s unique programming and high performance standards have attracted critical acclaim and earned the orchestra nine ASCAP awards for adventurous programming and the John S. Edwards Award for Strongest Commitment to New American Music. Since 2003 Mr. Rose has also served as Music Director of Opera Boston, an innovative opera company in residence at the historic Cutler Majestic Theatre.

As a guest conductor, Mr. Rose made his Tanglewood Festival debut in 2002 conducting Lukas Foss’ opera Griffelkin, a work he recorded for Chandos and released in 2003 to rave reviews. In 2003 he made his guest debut with the Netherlands Radio Symphony conducting three world premieres as part of the Holland Festival. He has led the American Composers Orchestra, the Warsaw Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra of the Ukraine, the Cleveland Chamber Symphony, and the National Orchestra of Porto, as well as several appearances with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

In June 2003, Bmop and Opera Boston together launched the much-celebrated Opera Unlimited, a ten-day contemporary opera festival featuring five operas and three world premieres. Mr. Rose led the world premiere of Elena Ruehr’s Toussaint Before the Spirits, the New England premiere of Thomas Ades’ Powder Her Face, as well as the revival of John Harbison’s Full Moon in March with “skilled and committed direction” according to The Boston Globe. In 2006 the Opera Unlimited Festival presented the North American premiere of Peter Eötvös’ Angels in America to critical acclaim.

Also recognized for interpreting standard operatic repertoire from Mozart to Bernstein, Mr. Rose’s production of Verdi’s Luisa Miller was hailed as an important operatic event. The Boston Globe recognized the production as “the best Verdi production presented in Boston in the last 15 years.” Mr. Rose’s recording of Samuel Barber’s Vanessa for Naxos has been hailed as an important achievement by the international press. He was chosen as the “Best Conductor of 2003” by Opera Online. He made his Chautauqua Opera debut in 2005 with a production of Lucia di Lammermoor and in the 2006–07 season conducted performances of Mozart’s La Clemenza di Tito, a revival of Weill’s The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny as well as Bizet’s The Pearl Fishers. In October 2007 he led the Boston premiere of Osvaldo Golijov’s Ainadamar with Dawn Upshaw and directed by Peter Sellars.

Gil Rose’s discography includes recordings of music by Arthur Berger, Eric Chasalow, Shih-Hui Chen, Lukas Foss, Charles Fussell, Michael Gandolfi, John Harbison, Lee Hyla, Tod Machover, Steven Mackey, Stephen Paulus, Bernard Rands, George Rochberg, Elena Ruehr, Gunther Schuller, Reza Vali, and Evan Ziporyn. His world premiere recording of the complete orchestral music of Arthur Berger was chosen by The New York Times as one of the “Best CD’s of 2003.” In 2007 Mr. Rose received Columbia University’s prestigious Ditson Award and an ASCAP Concert Music Award for his exemplary commitment to new American music.
The Boston Modern Orchestra Project (BMOP) is widely recognized as the premiere orchestra in the United States dedicated exclusively to commissioning, performing, and recording music of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Founded in 1996 by Artistic Director Gil Rose, BMOP’s mission is to illuminate the connections that exist naturally between contemporary music and contemporary society by reuniting composers and audiences in a shared concert experience. In its first ten seasons alone, BMOP programmed over 50 concerts of contemporary orchestral music; commissioned more than 20 works and presented over 40 world premieres; released 13 world premiere recordings; and collaborated with opera Boston to produce staged performances of contemporary operas including the opera unlimited festival of contemporary chamber opera.

In addition to its regular season at Boston’s Jordan Hall, the orchestra has performed in major venues on both the East and West Coasts and collaborated with internationally based artists and organizations. A nine-time winner of the ASCAP Award for Adventurous Programming of Orchestral Music and recipient of the prestigious John S. Edwards Award for Strongest Commitment to New American Music, BMOP has appeared at Tanglewood, the Festival of New American Music (Sacramento, CA), and Music on the Edge (Pittsburgh, PA).

In 2008 BMOP launched its signature record label, BMOP/sound. Additional BMOP recordings are available from Albany, New World, Naxos, Arsis, Oxingdale, and Chandos. BMOP CD’s are regularly reviewed by national and international publications including Gramophone, Fanfare, BBC Music, American Record Guide, The Chicago Tribune (Best CD’s of 2004), Time Out New York (Best CD’s of 2004), The Boston Globe (Best CD’s of 2003), and The New York Times (Best CD’s of 2003).

Composers are at the core of BMOP’s mission, and BMOP has hosted a Composer in Residence each season since 2000. In recognition of the importance of this position, Meet The Composer and the League of American Orchestras awarded BMOP one of six three-year Music Alive grants for a collaboration with composer Lisa Bielawa.

Dedicated to discovering and advocating for the next generation of composers and audiences, BMOP is committed to encouraging and extending the new music community. Beyond the concert hall, BMOP’s trend-setting Club Concerts bring “the music formerly known as classical” to downtown venues, and its in-depth outreach programs provide mentors and workshops for teenage composers in underserved communities.

BMOP’s greatest strength is the artistic distinction of its musicians and performances. Each season, Gil Rose gathers together an outstanding orchestra of dynamic and talented young performers, and presents some of the world’s top vocal and instrumental soloists. The New York Times says: “Mr. Rose and his team filled the music with rich, decisive ensemble colors and magnificent solos. These musicians were rapturous — superb instrumentalists at work and play.”
Eric Sawyer
Our American Cousin
Libretto by John Shoptaw
Producers: Gil Rose, Eric Sawyer Recording and editing: Joel Gordon

Our American Cousin was recorded on April 1 and 2, 2007 in Buckley Hall at Amherst College (Amherst, MA).

Our American Cousin is published by Lydian Press. All rights reserved.

This recording was made possible in part by Amherst College through the H. Axel Schupf '57 Fund For Intellectual Life and the John Tennant Adams Fund, and with the cooperation of the Boston Musicians’ Association.

The composer offers special thanks to Klára Móricz, David Schneider, Jenny Kallick, Ted Keyes, Suzette Farnham, Gregory Call, Janet Tobin, Ellen Keel, Ellen Ollensis, Linda McInerney, Lyn Ollensis, Curry Sawyer, Rachel Zoll, and Cheryl Zoll for their invaluable efforts towards making this recording possible. He also thanks all of the performers for their artistry and dedication to this project.

© 2008 BMOpsound 1006